Marquee Billing Often Unnoticed Remains Important Film Factor

by Douglas Rathgeb

One of the things that the average moviegoer may not notice when they're watching a film is the billing. It's usually the last thing one thinks about as they enjoy the movie. And yet, the size and style of the typeface used to announce actors' names can sometimes influence a viewer's impression of a film.

This is particularly true for evening concerts, the New York Times notes. For instance, students and teachers may be more inclined to support a film that features prominent names, as highlighted by the larger, bolder print used in the billing. On the other hand, names placed lower in the list may be less noticeable to the audience.

In fact, the newspaper points out that the way names are displayed on the screen can be important for the film's success. For example, students and teachers may be more likely to attend a film that features well-known actors, as suggested by larger fonts in the billing.

In summation, while the billing may seem insignificant, its impact on a film's audience may be significant. Moviemakers and studios would be wise to consider the visual cues provided by the billing when planning their releases.

Select Service Service Exam Causes Campus Controversy

At the heart of the controversy lies the Selective Service Exam, which students at the State University of New York at Albany are required to take. The exam is part of a nationwide program to ensure that all male students are counted for the draft. The exam is administered by the Selective Service System, which is a federal agency responsible for maintaining a pool of potential military recruits.

The exam was administered on the campus of SUNY Albany last week, and students were given the option of taking the exam online or on campus. The exam consists of multiple-choice questions and is intended to assess a student's understanding of American history and government.

The exam sparked controversy among students, who argued that it was a violation of their rights and that it was a waste of time. They also argued that the exam was not properly administered and that it was discriminatory.

The faculty senate and the student government have both expressed concern about the exam, and there have been calls for the exam to be abolished. The faculty senate has called for a moratorium on the exam, and the student government has called for a full investigation into the exam.

The controversy has drawn attention to the Selective Service System and the role it plays in American society. The Selective Service System has been criticized for its role in the Vietnam War and for its role in the War on Terror.

The Selective Service Exam is just one of many issues that are currently facing the State University of New York at Albany. The university is facing a budget crisis, and there are concerns about the quality of education and the safety of students.
Larger Auditorium Needed

Over 500 people will attend the Wayne Morse lecture this Friday. This is an example of the interest that can be generated by a speaker of Morse's stature.

In the future, several organizations on campus plan to bring to campus many prominent persons. However, with the inadequate facilities planned for the new campus, only a few such events will be able to take advantage of these programs.

The reason for this is that the largest auditorium that can be used is a lecture hall that will house only 400 people. The explanation that we have been given for this small hall is that the Albany Student Press believes this will be enough for the present needs.

In Search of a Function

"What is MYSKANIA?" was a question posed to several students recently by a "New York Times" reporter who was interviewing students on campus. The answer he was given was that MYSKANIA is the highest non-academic honorary on campus and is comprised of all the leaders elected by the student body. The reporter was also told of MYSKANIA's "secret society" reputation and negative image.

Intrigued by this story, a member of the Student Body expressed his concern that MYSKANIA serves as an example to the community. He felt that it would be a great service to the community if MYSKANIA were to open its doors to the public.

As the situation stands now, MYSKANIA is in search of a function. The Student Body may have satisfied the reporter but we fear that the student body does not possess a better justification. We plan to build a larger auditorium and that it would be unnecessary for the University to construct a building of comparable size.

The City Fathers have been building this hall for the last two decades and we think it was rather naive of the Administration to believe this hollow promise.

It is probably too late for the contractor to alter the plans for the lecture hall. We would like to see the Administration arrange for the use of a larger hall for organizations to use.

We hope that in the future the Administration will be more realistic and plan for the future, not for the present.

"We are told that the role of MYSKANIA will include investigations of various activities on campus and the procurement of moral judgments when crises arise. According to MYSKANIA's role is that of an investigative body in the community.

We do not feel that a group of students, selected by a popular vote of the student body, is qualified to perform such functions. They are elected on the basis of service to the school, intelligence and popularity.

As the situation stands now, MYSKANIA has been given the task of investigating many matters not only by the faculty but by the students as well. This may not be the best solution and it is possible that MYSKANIA's role should be more clearly defined.

Public Apology

To the Editor:

The faculty of the School of Law is greatly concerned about the question of "reputation" in connection with the libraries of the University. We feel that it is important to have an accurate and complete record of the books which are available in the libraries.

We are aware of the difficulties involved in maintaining such a record and we recognize the need for cooperation between the various departments of the University. However, we believe that it is important for the students to be aware of the extent to which our libraries are used.

We hope that this letter will serve to bring the matter to the attention of the appropriate authorities and that a solution will be found which will enable us to provide the best possible service to the students.
