Berecke's memorandum announced the decision that the President's commission had reached a unanimous decision to recommend that the former Class President be suspended. The decision was to be filed at an emergency session on the 25th of the month. It would be issued by the Student Affairs Council of the Carnegie Mellon University, which resides in Pittsburgh. The case is pending, and Berecke remains in his position as president of the student body.

Criminal Proceedings

When asked about the possibility of a criminal trial or civil lawsuit, Berecke said that no such proceedings were currently planned. He added that the university had received complaints from the student government and the administration about possible violations of student conduct rules. However, Berecke indicated that the complaints were not yet under investigation and that there was no indication of any criminal activity.

State Elections Results

In New York State, the Democratic candidate for Governor, Mario Cuomo, won the state with 60 percent of the vote. The Republican candidate, Jack Danker, received 38 percent of the vote. The results were a significant victory for the Democrats, who had been facing strong opposition from the Republicans. The election was won by a margin of 22 percentage points, which was the largest margin of victory in the state's history.

In Pennsylvania, the Democratic candidate for Governor, Bob Casey, won the state with 52 percent of the vote. The Republican candidate, Tom Ridge, received 46 percent of the vote. The results were a significant victory for the Democrats, who had been facing strong opposition from the Republicans. The election was won by a margin of 6 percentage points, which was the largest margin of victory in the state's history.

In Ohio, the Democratic candidate for Governor, Mike DeWine, won the state with 53 percent of the vote. The Republican candidate, Mike DeWine, lost the state with 47 percent of the vote. The results were a significant victory for the Democrats, who had been facing strong opposition from the Republicans. The election was won by a margin of 6 percentage points, which was the largest margin of victory in the state's history.

WASHINGTON L - Washington Post: Shoot november 1976, will be a 24 percent reduction in U.S. fighter strength, the first time in 13 years that the number of fighters stationed in Germany has been reduced. The reduction, which is part of a defense budget cut, will affect the American presence in Europe and may have implications for the future of the NATO alliance. The reduction is expected to take effect in 1978 and will result in the withdrawal of four squadrons, each consisting of 96 aircraft. This is the first significant reduction in U.S. fighter strength in Europe in more than 10 years. The decision was made in response to changes in the strategic landscape and the need to realign U.S. military assets to accommodate future missions.

In recent years, NATO has faced increased pressure from the Warsaw Pact, which has expanded its military capabilities. This has led to a reassessment of the role of NATO forces in Europe, with a focus on deterring potential aggression from the East. The reduction of fighter strength in Germany is seen as a step in this direction, as it aligns U.S. forces with the overall NATO strategy.

The reduction will affect the United States Air Force and the United States Army, which together have a large presence in Germany. The decision to reduce fighter strength was made in consultation with the German government and other NATO allies.

The reduction is expected to have a significant impact on the American military presence in Europe. It will result in the withdrawal of four squadrons, each consisting of 96 aircraft, from Germany. This will reduce the total number of American fighter aircraft in Germany from 384 to 300. The reduction is expected to be implemented in phases, with the first two squadrons withdrawing in 1978 and the remaining two withdrawing in 1980.

The decision to reduce fighter strength in Germany is part of a broader strategic reassessment of the American military presence in Europe. Other changes being considered include the withdrawal of some American nuclear weapons from Germany and the reduction of ground forces in the region. The overall goal is to align American forces with the strategic priorities of the NATO alliance.

The reduction of fighter strength in Germany is expected to become a significant topic of discussion in the coming months, as it raises questions about the future of the American military presence in Europe and the role of NATO forces in deterring potential aggression from the East.

Guidance Towards Goals

racism still rising?

To the Editor:

If we are to succeed in the struggle for equality, we must first acknowledge the root of all discrimination: racism. To ignore this fact is to deny ourselves the power to overcome it. We must address this issue head-on, and work together to create a society where all individuals are treated with dignity and respect.

Yours sincerely,
