State Budget Needs $700 M To Balance

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) - New York's budget problems, already considered among the most severe in the nation, could grow even worse by year's end, state finance officials said Thursday.

The Empire State, which has been grappling with a deficit crisis since the mid-1970s, faces an estimated $700 million shortfall for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979, according to a report by the state comptroller's office.

The report, released Thursday, said the state is facing a $522 million deficit for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, and an additional $178 million deficit for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979.

The state comptroller, who is appointed by the governor, said the budget deficit is due to a combination of factors, including a decline in state revenues, increased costs for social services, and a rise in federal aid.

The comptroller recommended several measures to help close the deficit, including cuts in state spending, increased taxes, and a review of state programs to determine if they are necessary.

The report also said the state's budget problems are likely to worsen in the future, as the state faces the challenges of an aging population, rising health care costs, and a slow economic recovery.

The comptroller called on the governor and state lawmakers to take action to address the budget crisis, saying the state cannot afford to continue to operate on a deficit basis.

The report was presented to the state legislature, which is expected to take up the budget issues in the coming weeks.

The Greek Echo

by John Spyde and Diane Faragalia

There's a rumor going around that the Greek Echo is going to be sold to a group of students by an individual off-campus organization. The rumor is based on the fact that the newspaper has been published for the last couple of years by a local newspaper company, and it is believed that the group is trying to make a profit from the sale.

Some students believe that the newspaper should continue to be published by the students themselves, while others think that it should be sold to a commercial company. The issue is currently under discussion on the campus, and it is hoped that a decision will be reached soon.

The World Is Flat

The election. I know. But I've been thinking about it all week. The feeling that something is about to happen in a significant way.

This message will not be appropriate or meaningful unless you understand the essence of the situation. The world is changing, and the questions we must ask are: What is the future? What does it mean? What are our choices?

Our second problem is that we are not ready. We get hungry for food, for water, for land, for power. But there are forces now, like those we are about to examine, which are not ready. The world is not.

Our third problem is that we are not clear. We are confused. We are uncertain. We arerama. The world is clearly.

We must act. We must act now. We must act in the present. The world is now.

Perfect symbol of the love you share

In Airfield's 1968 production of "The Odd Couple," directed by Ellis Kaufman, a Tony Award winner for his play "The Odd Couple," the best-selling comedy of the 20th century, the actors were Ellory Stuart as "Oscar" and Edward Filkin as "Archer," a well-dressed actor turned stockbroker who finds himself forced to share a cramped apartment with the boisterous and eccentric "Oscar," played by Stuart. The play, which ran for more than 30 years on Broadway, was a hit on the West Coast, and was adapted into a successful film in the late 1960s. The play is a classic of American theatre, and has been performed all over the world. The cast was rounded out by the talented John Raitt as "Bud," a long-time friend of "Archer," and by the equally talented Ethel Merman as "Sara," the landlady who is driven to near madness by the antics of her two tenants. The play is a great example of the power of theatre to capture the imagination and the heart of its audience, and is a testament to the enduring popularity of classic American theatre.
