Egleston Hurls Danes Over RPI
Team Faces New Palz Today

Tom Egleston's pitching paced the Albany State University (Great Dane baseball team to its first victory of the season by pitching a four-hit, three-warehouse complete game for the Engineers by the score of 3-1. The diamonique now have a 1-3 record and will host New Palz today at UBC's site. Coach Finley was scheduled to throw yesterday while Big George Webbe was assigned to the starting assignment today.

The visitors drew first blood in the top of the game by scoring an unearned run in the second inning. However, the Redmen would score all day.

Why Cup Lee singled after an error by McFadden, but he was out at second for the second out of the first, then after he swung away Dempsey Elliott. Lee would score on the next throw. The Redmen, without a loss to date, would score again in the first after a double by Jack Egan. The score would remain 1-0.

In the second, Dick Gainey would start off his first singles match and not give up any runs until the fourth. The singles score was 2-0.

In the third, Bob Flowers would start off his second singles match and also would not give up any runs until the fourth. The singles score was 3-0.

The Danes scored all their runs in the third after a double by Jack Egan. The score would remain 3-0.

The Redmen would score all their runs in the fourth after a double by Jack Egan. The score would remain 3-0.

Weekend To Feature State Fair, Picnic

The culmination of the festivities of Carnival Week will be the fair on the terrace of the Campus Center on Saturday and the all-university picnic on Sunday. It is hoped by Sharon Toback and Joseph McCullough, co-chairmen and all the carnival workers that this week will punctuate the beginning of spring with an exclamation of fun and activity.

Saturday morning the Fair will move into full swing. The first event of the day is the State Fair motorcade. This cavalcade of convertibles, containing all of the candidates for Mr. and Miss State Fair will leave Dutch Quad at 9 a.m. go to Alumni Quad, and return to the Academic Podium.

Concurrent with the motorcade, there will be a walking parade at the two new quads, led by the University's four Mademoiselle girls.

The year, the fair will be made up of 35 booths, more than ever before. There will be five trophy awards for the booths, covering areas of excellence: one for the best in the Fair, one for best money-maker, one for the original booth, one for the best decorated and one for uniqueness in publicity. Sunday there will be raft building in the morning, and egg hunt in the afternoon, a lake christening and a variety of races. There will be 50$ entrance fee per team. Sign up sheets for all races will be at the Campus Center Information Desk during the week.

The money raised during State Fair will be used to support the Student Ambassador program.

Contests Highlight Week-day Activities

This year the University Carnival is being expanded to include activities during the five days before the State Fair. Saturday, May 6. Among the activities planned for each day of the week will be several happenings and contests.

On Monday there will be a balloon contest. The contest is designed for a team of three students from each Quad to blow up an official weather balloon with a bicycle pump.

On Tuesday and Thursday a kite flying contest will be held for all students of the University. There is no restriction on the type of kite that can be entered.

Wednesday is the day of the Frisby contests. This will be the only chance this year for the students of the University to be recognized in this unofficial sport.

Throughout this week there will be elections for Mr. and Miss State Fair. The elections will be held in the Campus Center and on the dinner lines from Monday to Thursday.

Booster buttons will be sold in the Campus Center. It is hoped by the officials that these buttons will help create the spirit they wish. The "Gentle Thursday" happening will call for a special kind of spirit.

"The Kitchen Sink" will finish the week and begin the weekend Friday night. This will be a collection of entertainment and surprise in Lecture Room #1. After the "Kitchen Sink" there will be a bonfire and bonfire at the lake area.

Outdoor Theatre Idea Uses Natural Setting

Arthur Laurents' "A Clearing in the Woods" has moved outdoors at the University. The last State University Theatre production of the season, has moved into its final stages of rehearsal by moving casts and crews outdoors to the new Theatre by the Lake.

The change of locale, according to Martin Mann, the play's director, has worked in integrating changes in the cast. The entire atmosphere surrounding rehearsals and individual performances changed radically.

Scheduled for production Monday, May 2 through June 2, rehearsals have given technical crews an opportunity to work outdoors, setting the scene for the outdoor theatre. "I used to work with the outdoor theatre, thereby to the theatre," says Pam Williams, technical director of the "Wing The World" table of the Lake Theatre, which resulted in a larger scale of production.

The entire setting of the play changes the atmosphere. "A natural setting is a natural setting," says Mrs. Williams, "and it is easier for the actors to work outdoors, setting the scene for the outdoor theatre."

The change of locale, established from its location by a lake remains into the outdoor theatre. Set in a natural setting by the lake forms the necessary background.

The physical, he said, "but really it's its surroundings." It sounds metaphorical, Laurents has been hailed.

With all aspects of theatre focusing on Virginia, the central character, one that is more theatrical, the fantasy aspect of the play all lends itself to stylization of action in some respects.

Driving the girls away, Virginia closes her eyes and calls "Andy." Andy is ordinary, knowing this, Virginia cannot love him. He appears but as they talk the voices of the girls remind her that we're here. "Oh, then where are we?" "In her head." Bushing at the girls who have dragged an old trunk of hers into the house, Virginia, that she was loved, Virginia begins to accept herself and to know what love is.

A play which telescopes a whole century in the life of a young girl, "A Clearing in the Woods" as a deliberate change of pace from his production last year, director Martin Mann has selected a play which explores a whole century in the life of a young girl, "A Clearing in the Woods." "We can do things with stage pictures," Mann said, "that would be out of place in a straight drama."

Through the play's director, has of tickets purchased will be re-issued in Humanities 140. There will be no reserved seats for this performance. Weekly performances will be announced on local radio and television stations. Such a policy is standard for the University Theatre production, and its last production, "Stop The World," since it was out of place in a straight drama."

SUMMARY

"A Clearing in the Woods" begins in darkness, with gentle, nostalgic music and lighting. The audience is introduced to the setting, "Wing The World," where the actors are based. The play opens with the girls, Jigee and Nora, who have been brought to the clearing by a child of nine or ten, enters, both begging Virginia to "take care of them." Just as Virginia herself cries to Barney, her father whose sole occupation is golfing and drinking, to "help me," a question "Do you love me Daddy?" as Virginia (Paula Michaels) and Nora (Jacqueline Berger) look on apprehensively.

While it would seem that Mr. Laurents, whose last production was "Stop The World," is off the usual path, the very openness of this approach, for which innovation Laurents has been hailed, serves as a metaphor for the play and the mood of the play. Penetrating a person's psychology for the possibility of a cancellation due to inclement weather has been converted into a theatre seat number from the time when Albany Theatre by the Lake gets its name into the outdoor theatre. Set in a natural setting by the lake forms the necessary background.
