Words On Wolinsky...

By Shirley Stief Phares

In the first issue of the "Folklore" magazine, Miss Alice Williams, '48, the editor, presented a subscription list which included among its members the writer. It was a pleasure to find that one of the books on the list was a copy of "The Story of a Folk Song," a work on folk lore written by Mr. Wolinsky, a member of the State College faculty. This book is the result of his long experience as a musicologist, and it is full of information about the history and development of folk songs from all parts of the world.

Forbidden Fruit...

By Elwood Finkelman

A college newspaper editor created a furor last week when he wrote in the college paper that "Forbidden Fruit," a famous opera by Giuseppe Verdi, was "not worth the money spent on it." The editor's statement was based on his belief that the opera was "too long and too overdone," and he recommended that it be omitted from the college program. The editor's decision was met with a demonstration of disapproval by the students, who presented books they had bought, and conversed with the editor about the uplifting effects these visits had upon the serenity of the students.

Abe Sherer S '2/c Quartermaster School in Bainbridge Island, who is the son of a wealthy businessman, was found dead in his room on the morning of the day the opera was performed. The cause of death was suicide, and the police believe that the cause was the embarrassment caused by the editor's statement.

State Students Visit Legislature

The purpose of these visits is to acquaint the students with the workings of the state government, and to give them an opportunity to express their views on various issues. The students are divided into groups, each of which is assigned to a certain committee, and they have the opportunity to speak to the legislators on their own behalf. The trip is an important part of the students' education, and it helps them to understand the workings of the government.
