Accreditation Deferred For Social Welfare

President Evan R. Collins at the Tuesday afternoon conference announced that there will be no Council on Accreditation for Social Welfare in 1967.

Mr. Bernstein said the Council for Social Work on Education concluded that there will be no council on accreditation for Social Welfare in 1967. The decision about existence of the school was based on the primary theme for the conference: the importance of a broader base of operation for social work.

The college's role in the accreditation again in the spring of 1968. If accreditation is approved in the spring of 1968, the college will be required to have a social work program approved by the Professional Standards Committee of the National Association of Social Workers. If accreditation is not approved by the spring of 1968, the college will have to make some changes in their program to meet the requirements of the council.

Perlmuter Discusses Academic Regulations

Lyman Perlmuter, vice-president of the College of arts and Sciences, has been working since last January on the academic regulations which will govern students in all areas from new majors of classroom discipline to grading policies. The regulations will be presented to the Senate in October after which it will be sent to the faculty for study and discussion. While Perlmuter, who has presented the most detailed plan yet, fears that a complete set of regulations would involve students in too many committees and would add to their overburdened work load, he said the committee also included students, faculty members and others of the administration.

The Senate, in a meeting last week, voted to establish a general regulations committee which will meet with faculty members to study academic regulations. Although this small college has only one academic regulation, Perlmuter said that the committee should allocate administrative responsibility for the college on a large scale.

The committee, which is comprised of five members, will be housed in the third floor of the Old Hall of the Academic Center. It will meet twice a month in closed sessions.

Maintovani in Concert in Troy Tomorrow

Mantovani, the Italian orchestra conductor, will return to the Troy Postum Club, 349 Broadway, at 6:30 p.m., where he will present his special arrangements. Mantovani's composition "Toyshop of Happiness," one of his own compositions, was written for a retreat into the nineteenth century. Although this small college has only one academic regulation, Perlmuter said that the committee should allocate administrative responsibility for the college on a large scale.

Tryout Dates—Gantry Reading Monday

Tryout dates for the first two seasons of the college's playing teams will be held at 10:30 and 11:15 a.m. in the Old Hall of the Academic Center. The tryouts will feature the first two seasons of the college's playing teams, which include the College of arts and Sciences, and headquarters of the college on a large scale.

The committee, which is comprised of five members, will be housed in the third floor of the Old Hall of the Academic Center. It will meet twice a month in closed sessions.

The Jazz Review

By Ellis Kaufman

This past summer was a very good year for jazz enthusiasts. The weather was warm, the music was great, and the jazz festival was held in the Catskill Mountains. For those who attended, it was a memorable experience of a lifetime. Fossil Weber, the curator of The Institute of Fine Arts, commented on the success of the festival. "The Festival was a wonderful experience for all of us," he said. "We had a great time, and we hope to do it again next year."
Notes from the Movement

by Donald Arman

One of the minor tragedies afforded upon this nation by John F. Kennedy's death was the loss of the man who would best be able to write the history of the administration. Several members of his administration and staff have already written in their reminiscences of him. Arthur Schlesinger's account, "A Thousand Days," focused mainly on foreign policy, although much of the domestic policy was handled by a number of other men of lesser note, and most of the people bequeathed to the present obviously decided after his death. They were mostly personally opposed to him, but they all followed his general advice. Arthur Schlesinger, too, has written, and the politically skilled Schlesinger, too, has written, and the politically skilled
