Don't Apologize...

It was brought to our attention this week that too many State College students have a very negative attitude toward this institution. We are all willing to sit back and criticize the food in Dining Halls, what Senator does, or a certain teacher. Our intentions are the best, by criticizing we will stimulate people into improvement.

But in our opinion we should apologize for the school. It isn’t necessary. There is no reason why you or I apologize to our friends from Cornell or Michigan because we go to "State Teachers." For once let’s try to recognize the value of this school.

Start by reading this week’s "Affairs of State." I look over what Louis Jones had to say about the college in his book (page 3). Think for a moment of what you will have been exposed to by the time you graduate—an outstanding facility, a stimulating educational program.

Try to re-evaluate your feeling about the school from an academic point of view—and remember why you’re in college. Will you be able to make this challenging mental experience last a lifetime? Among universities this is one of the best, but few of us realize what we have is there.

When we join the ranks of "educated men and women" we will be representatives of a good college. We will have had the advantage of an education from a variety of sources, an understanding mind in an institution of high academic standards.

You won’t just graduate from Albany State; you will graduate from an excellent educational center.

They said it couldn’t be done! State College made history this week and every school for four weeks before finish this fall is the first, and we hope, the last achievement of its kind.

For the members of the student body who are not acquainted with the process of making out a schedule for the spring, you must understand it is the central nervous system of the higher education institution. It is impossible to work out a schedule before the time when courses can be dropped has ended, or after eight weeks of the semester have passed. The reasoning behind this is that many of the "phantom conflicts" will not appear in the schedule and it will be easier to make up.

Several times the schedule has been worked out by hand machines, but this is not as simple as it seems: the machines can’t do the job at all. This year’s schedule was corrected by two of the professors here at State, who spent all of Easter vacation and many evenings after the vacation working on this year. Quite the student body can give them an A for the course, they even learned in the term project itself.

On behalf of the student body, we feel we owe a vote of appreciation to the Carver and Re. Lippard for this magnificent job.

Next week there will be a letter to the editors correcting the spelling of the above names by the concerned parties.

Spring is definitely with us now. With it comes increased athletic activity here on campus. The two sports that attract the most attention are, of course, baseball and softball. No matter what the calendar of scheduled games may promise, the number of interested spectators in the stands and the sound of the bat and ball can be found in nearly every intercollegiate baseball game. As the spring days become warmer and more pleasant weather, the baseball fans can be found at the various fields throughout the area. The game is a popular one, and the fans are eager to see their favorite teams in action. The baseball season is in full swing, and the fans are enjoying the games.
