TOO MANY HONORS?

The publication of an honor roll of 159 names in a College enrollment of some 3,000 students is likely to thrill students to wonder. Probably their performances fall into one of two groups: the students of the first group are likely to feel very, very gratified, while the second group will feel that there is something to be desired in their performance. The first of these may be negligible; the second, however, is worthy of serious thought. One of the goals of this institution is to provide a first-rate, first-class education for every student. This goal, however, is not met unless every student is given the chance to achieve it. The question is: How can we, as a group, work together to achieve this goal?

The answer to this question is found in the work of the faculty. The faculty's role is to provide the resources and guidance necessary for students to succeed. This includes everything from course selection to career counseling. The faculty must also be aware of the needs of their students and work to meet those needs. This can be achieved through regular communication with students, as well as by providing opportunities for students to voice their concerns.

The faculty must also work to ensure that every student has the opportunity to succeed. This includes providing support for students who are struggling, as well as recognizing the achievements of those who are excelling. The faculty must also work to ensure that the curriculum is relevant and engaging, and that it is designed to meet the needs of all students.

Finally, the faculty must work to ensure that the institution is providing a safe and welcoming environment for all students. This includes providing resources for students who are struggling with mental health or academic issues, as well as ensuring that all students have the opportunity to succeed.

In conclusion, the faculty must work together to achieve the goal of providing a first-rate, first-class education for every student. This can be achieved through regular communication with students, providing support for students who are struggling, recognizing the achievements of students who are excelling, ensuring that the curriculum is relevant and engaging, and providing a safe and welcoming environment for all students.

"Tradition Is Not Necessary For School Spirit," Dr. D. V. Smith Tells Students

"Tradition is not necessary for school spirit," said Dr. D. V. Smith, assistant professor of history, to a group of college students while discussing a question of primary school spirit. In the presence of other similar groups, for example, at intervals of physical combat, such as football games, it is to be desired that tradition may be not necessary, however, that these games have become commercialized. Commercialism has been a monotonous procedure for the excellence of the playing. Because of this, the best students love for their alma mater.

Committee To Report on Plans for Publication Board

A committee has been appointed to investigate the opinions of the faculty and students upon the advisability of the establishment of a College Board of Publications. Such a board is in successful operation in many colleges and the question now is to whether its organization at State is necessary or possible. The committee whose report will probably be given in a few weeks to the college, by Dr. Barker, chairman. Miss Helen T. Fay, manager of the college, and Miss E. L. Lipton, librarian of publications. Student Organizations Must Reduce Budgets

All student organizations which receive money from the budget must reduce their expenditures. So far as the third quarter of the current academic year is concerned, only 25 percent of the student organizations have met the twenty percent reduction which is required by the college. The number of students who must be reduced is approximately 500, and the budget department of the college must work to get the required amount of money. Some of the student activities which have been affected by the budget cut include the publication of the college newspaper, the college magazine, and the college yearbook.
