Batmen's Rally Falls Two Runs Short

by Mike Polkarski

It was one of those exhilarating moments. A single run in the bottom of the seventh inning assured New Paltz a win over SUNY-C at the end of regulation.

The game was tied at seven apiece when Carlos Oliveras followed an intentional walk with a two-out single in the bottom of the seventh inning. The runners at first and second base meant a lot. The score tied at seven meant a three-run outburst in the seventh inning would win the game. An intentional walk the previous inning insured a two-out rally, and it was the seventh inning.

When Whitaker tried to pick off the lead runner at first base, Oliveras dashed for second base. Hall could not get the throw on Oliveras, and second base was empty. The Danes suddenly had two men on for the first time in the seventh inning.

Oliveras then smashed a hard ground ball to shortstop, scoring the winning run and making the final score 8-6.

``The game was basically won in the bottom of the seventh inning, when Carlos Oliveras lined a base hit to score the winning run,'' said Coach Bell.

``The Danes played well, and made some errors late in the game. Good fortune was with us in the bottom of the seventh inning, and we scored the winning run on a base hit by Carlos Oliveras. The Danes played well, but we were able to overcome our mistakes and win the game.

THAILAND (AP) - The United States will remove more than one-quarter of its troops in Thailand in the next two months, taking full advantage of the end of the military mission in South Vietnam. The United States, in making the announcement, said it was taking a "decisive" step toward fulfilling its commitment to reduce its military presence in Indochina.

In 1962, Alaska was a frontier of the United States. Now, it is a state with a rich history and a diverse culture. The state is known for its scenic natural beauty, including the colorful landscape of the Alaskan tundra, the majestic glaciers of the Kenai Peninsula, and the rugged coastline of the Aleutian Islands.

Recent Student Survey Studies Smoking Effects

by Cynthia Hackman

New donor makes $10,000 offer

This year, the role of a non-smoking student who was already a part of the SUNY Buffalo campaign. Bob O'Brien, third-year medical student at the State University of New York at Buffalo, said that the campaign "would have been more effective if we had more money." The campaign, which aimed to reduce smoking among students, used a variety of methods to reach its audience, including a series of advertisements that were shown in classrooms, libraries, and dining halls.

The campaign also included a student survey, which was conducted by a group of six students from a local "rights for non-smokers" group. The survey asked students about their smoking habits and attitudes toward smoking. The results of the survey were used to create a feasible solution to the problem of smoking on campus.

"I was really disappointed," Levenson asserted. "I was really disappointed with the results of the first part of the survey. The results showed a high variance in opinion. Smokers tended to rate smoking higher than non-smokers, while non-smokers tended to rate smoking lower than smokers. For both smokers and non-smokers, the majority felt that smoking should be eliminated within lecture centers and classroom or lecture centers."

The group plans on submitting the results of the survey to the Results of the survey to the University Senate, hoping to have the results of the survey results to impact the University Senate's decision on whether to legislate that smoking in any lecture centers would be an equitable compromise. Most students, both smokers and non-smokers, were not happy with the results of the survey, but they wanted to see what the University Senate would do about it.

"I'm sure the number of people uninterested in smoking will go up, but it's difficult to say whether it's going to be a problem or not," a student said. "I don't think we should just ignore the results of the survey."

Don't Barr the Students

The SUNYA faculty will be taking their annual vote Wednesday as to whether or not students will participate in the University Senate. Although student representation on policy and advisory bodies has been institutionalized in some areas, there is a possibility that the faculty may choose to exclude the students.

Additionally, student attendance at Senate meetings this year has been poor, in part due to the difference from the faculty attendance record. Some members are actually very disturbed or unhappy involved with parliamentary procedure, but no one in the faculty is exempt to these reasons.

The basic for student removal does not involve any difficulties with their day-to-day involvement in Senate affairs, but is a philosophical one. Student presence in the Senate may be seen as a token gesture on the part of student faculty members-believing that we have no business on a university governing body. There are faculty members who even meet with students on a one-to-one basis.

But whatever their arguments, the entire campus would suffer without students on the Senate. Students are the largest group on campus, and through college and through college, they have no political voice and few financial ties with the school. Their perspective, obviously biased in every way, should be considered.

Student representation on University Senate is exempt from the Senate. Their involvement in Senate procedures, but no one in the faculty involvement in Senate meetings, and therefore should be working to change it, not to accept it. The more enlightened segments of society deline "enlightenment," I doubt that college students are no more "enlightened" than non-college students.

There is always a hole of some 50-60% at this time of year, and with the support of our involved student body the Banner-Mohller administration would avoid the mistakes and go beyond the successes of previous SUNYA administrations.

The SUNYA student body showed once again last week that they are among the most vibrant and the most involved of any student body in the state. There were a number of events during the week, and the support of this involved student body helps make the Banner-Mohller administration more effective.

A New Beginning

Gerald Ford was approached by an influential group in June to accept an invitation to address the Nation. It appears that this invitation was turned down because Mr. Ford was not prepared to assume the responsibilities of the Presidency, and the country, both in the White House and the Washington press corps. He did not feel that he had the time to devote to the position.

For no other reason than because he is so intrinsic himself, stories of his new young, energetic colors and the excemeary of the environment in which he exists will continue to dominate headlines. He will not be the first President to have his image shaped and consumed every evening. The media will be in the hands of a few, and only now that the White House door is to be watched for a football game. Ford is far better known, and whatever President Ford represents, there is a formidable stable of people involved in the Ford administration. Signs of the Day: President Ford is a very dynamic man, house hunting, but that is in fact not preventing the Secretary of Defense, James Schlesinger, from attending a recent Senate hearing. Mr. Schlesinger, a former…

A Matter of Decency

By Hillary D. Klein

"Could you please not to put off the line at which that editor?"

"No, I just have to smoke now."

That was the answer to the question, "May I smoke in the library?" and the one that we have been hearing from the smoke shop for a while now. The library is not a smoking area, and the editor is not allowed to smoke in the library. However, the smoke shop is a designated smoking area, and the editor is allowed to smoke there.

Tactics: Now and Then

By Linda Rehak

In the spring of 1975, the Pennsylvania State University was the site of a major challenge by student protesters. The protesters were demanding the enforcement of university policies regarding smoking and parking. The university had a policy that prohibited smoking in certain areas and required that vehicles park in designated areas.

The smoke shop was a place where the editor could smoke legally. The library was a place where the editor could not smoke legally. The smoke shop was located near the library, and the editor could easily smoke there without being caught.

The protesters were demanding that the university enforce its policies. The editor was demanding the right to smoke legally. The protesters and the editor were both facing the same issue, but they were taking different approaches to it.

Lou Reed A Real ‘Rock ’n’ Roll Animal’

by Agnes Rabel
Her Lou, the “Fuehrer”?? “Herr”?? Do “White Light”?? Do everything!!
In spite of the conditions required from the weekly ballroom audience, Lou Reed played exactly what he wanted to play Friday night. So much, so long. And what he wanted to play was, for the most part, new recorded material. He opened brilliantly with Velvet Underground songs like the opener, “Sweet Jane,” then “Walking on My Own,” and “Heroin,” and Harper performed several songs from his solo albums.

Dressed in black and sharp brown hair, this was the Lou Reed of Berlin and Sally Cane’s “Flamingo”- a punk rocker, exchanging leather for the distinctly white tuxedo of Transmetropolitan and Rock ‘n’ Roll Animal.

He’s also exchanged musicians since the last tour, and considerably almost were guitarists Steve Hunter and Rick Vito. For Reed’s live releases such excellent albums, when they left to join the Alice Cooper tour, Reed took on another guitarist and decided to play guitar himself, something he hasn’t done in concert quite a while. He also, now in the audience, stood next to Berge Lynn in the audience, and Rick Vito.

But by the time the last show began, Reed had to be led onto stage. His guitar was played with some sort of back, he’s been treated badly by the audience. Amazing enough, he still managed to get most of the lyrics right and even splashed in a little guitar work here and there. Reed seven excellent numbers for his new mix, with the possible exception of himself—an rhythm, line, but his “solo” on a lead. They’re good, however, they lack the strength and sense of urgency that Velvet’s guitarist supplied. Reed has also undertaken to be player for the keyboards, definitely an improvement.

Perhaps aware of the problem, they stayed away from long instrumental jams—they saved it once, during the encore of the late show, but even that showed some form of the point of death. Reed left the unique lyrics of Lou Reed to carry the show, and again, they worked.

The show was opened by String Driven Thing, a band unique in fact, they employ a rock violin, or punk rock, exchanging leather for the death’s head look of the Velvet Underground. This same confusion was evident when Reed and his band finished their regular set. They stopped playing, put down their instruments and walked off the stage. Perhaps the result of reeds that worked too much, but some had enough, they almost brought them back for another encore.

Asimov Talks About Women in Science Fiction

by Isaac Asimov

"It is an obvious fact that a number of women have sooner or later tried to write science fiction. I always wonder how many of them are satisfied with their accomplishments."

He said some women have been so satisfied with their accomplishments that they continued to write science fiction, for which they should be congratulated. He also mentioned that some women have left the field of science fiction and turned to other fields, such as literature or politics.

Trackmen Fifth In SUNYAC

by Jan Lafaye

State Theatre hosted the fifth Annual SUNYAC Track and Field Championships on Saturday at Ithaca College. Following a successful 1972 season, the Ithacans entered the meet with high hopes and a dozen athletes qualifying for the NCAA-Division III championships held in March.

Coach Murray was also the chief inspiration to the larger groups of athletes. His own second overall in the 110 high hurdles with a time of 16.1 was the only fault of his day, and perhaps his most important as well. Murray is the only athlete in SUNYAC history to qualify for the NCAA-Division III championships three years in a row, and a high note to his third place.

As a result, Post added one more to their lead. Post went on to win the meet with a total of 79 points and Fredonia took third with 49 points. A total of 12 athletes qualified for the NCAA-Division III championships, 3 from Fredonia, 3 from SUNYAC, 4 from SUNYIT, and 2 from Alfred.

Dr. Emmett B. Fields will take office as SUNYAC's new President in July, said the campus "looks quiet since, and we got a lot more noise this week."

"I'm interested in," Fields said, "the idea of forming a body like the Student Senate, but I don't want it to be a leading role. I want it to be a leading role.
