Perhaps the biggest change which has been made by the two groups, according to the Inter-Society Council, is the practice of contacting students directly. This person has been on the college campus for more than one semester. Many students have been on the college campus for more than one semester. They have made a point to be in the dormitories and other places where students gather to discuss the activities of the two organizations.

The theory behind this change is that the presence of students on the college campus for more than one semester is beneficial for the students who are interested in joining the organizations. The presence of these students makes it easier for the organizations to reach out to potential members and encourage them to join.
