Professors, Digressors ???

Professors are forever grating their students. Some have permitted students to do so merely on their professors. Considering these students in his new book on higher education, Some of My Best Friends are Professors, Professor George Williams of the Fire Institute in Texas finds that in a typical study, 81% of their professors were "poor". "They were late 10," were considered excellent by the students.

"These figures," Williams adds, "reflect fairly well my own experience, that professors who have children in college, often in the same college where their children taught. These children have the advantage of professors and often intimately inform others in the choice of professors and courses. Nevertheless, because every one of these professor-fathers whom I have consulted has admitted that at least half of the professors under whom his children studied were incompetent."

But lest the opinions of students seem insufficient as a criterion of merit in a university, Professor Williams submits another criterion, the numbers of students who flunk out of the universities. The number is usually supposed to be underestimated in estimating that the colleges are absolute and total failures in trying to educate about 20 to 30% of the students who enter college as it was when it entered as a freshmen class. We must assume that 35 to 40% of the students who enter college as good as any college can expect; yet the college failed to graduate them. These children have had the advantage of professional, professor-sponsoring that has been their own as well as that of their children. So the students of such churches have the advantage of the parents of their children.

Editors' Note: On Saturday night last the University Theater presented the film "Lust for Life," a 1955 film by Richard Quine. The film is based on the life of Ignazio Balbo, an Italian immigrant who became a painter of great significance but was unsuccessful in his career. The film is a biography that follows Balbo from his childhood to his death, including his adventures as an artist and his personal life. The film received mixed reviews, with some critics praising the acting and direction, while others criticized the editing and pacing.

In keeping with the state-wide election season, the Pedagogical Political Forum sponsored a debate between the candidates for student body president and vice president. The debate was held at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union. The candidates were John Smith (Republican) and Jane Doe (Democratic). The debate was moderated by Professor John Doe, a member of the Political Science Department.

The Junior class members were appreciative of the various events held by the class council throughout the year. The members of the class council have been working hard to ensure that the junior class has a memorable year. They have organized various events, such as the junior-senior prom, the junior-senior week, and the junior-senior picnic, which have been well-received by the students.

On Sunday night last, the University Jazz Band performed at the annual Fall Jazz Concert, held at the University Amphitheater. The concert was attended by more than 5,000 spectators, who were treated to a variety of jazz styles, including swing, bebop, and modern jazz. The concert was sponsored by the University Music Department.

An excellent recommendation came from the Pedagogian yesterday, which offers the possibility of the Pedalganian's continued publication with little profit to the campus has now been feasible.

Originally known as the Pedagogian, the new publication was started by the Pedagogian, a group of students interested in the publication of a newspaper for the benefit of the students.

The purpose of the publication is to provide a forum for the expression of opinions and ideas among the students, and to promote a better understanding of the University and its policies.

Cabinet Discussed the Handbook, Editor's Recommendations

The Pedagogian has been the subject of much discussion in recent weeks. The Handbook is a collection of the editor's recommendations, which have been submitted by the student body and the faculty.

The Handbook is a useful tool for students, and it is hoped that it will continue to be published in the future.
