When War Comes —

By Assistant Business Manager Harriet Sprague

At this time of the year it is particularly opportune to address the subject of war. For, not only do we reach a period of the year when the weather is generally more agreeable and the days longer, but it also gives us a chance to consider our future as a country and a people.

The thought of war is always a difficult one to consider, yet it is something that we must all face as a reality. The question is not whether we will see war, but when. The only sure way to prevent war is to be prepared for it.

The preparation for war involves more than just military training. It also includes the economic and social aspects of the country. We must be sure to have a strong economy to support our armed forces, and we must also be ready to deal with the social upheaval that war can cause.

The preparation for war is not just a responsibility of the government. It is also the responsibility of every individual. We must be prepared to contribute our own share to the war effort, whether it be through volunteering our time or through financial contributions.

In conclusion, let us all remember that war is a reality that we must face. We must be prepared for it, and we must do our part to help prevent it. Only then can we truly say that we have done our duty as good citizens.
