PAY YOUR FARE IN MILNE

In the time-honored Walter Winchell style, may this editorial column present a wordy orchid to Prof. John M Sayles for his very praiseworthy speech of welcome to the Milne students. Prof. Sayles' metaphor, "pay your way" is so apt that even an editorial writer could not misinterpret it.

Let's apply that sentiment "pay your fare as you go" to a situation right in our own back yard. We, and I mean here we students, are getting a good deal from Milne. Not only are we receiving an education and a thorough preparation for college, but the school is giving us a great deal more from the cultural standpoint. Contact with others in work and social affairs develops us morally and spiritually, and also provides an enormous amount of fun. Yet, what do we do for Milne? Don't we owe the school something?

How do you think these would square the debt, pay for our benefits?

1. Unfailing loyalty to the school both in thought and deed.
2. Cheerful obedience to school rules and regulations.
3. Willing participation in school and classroom affairs.

Let's make it a point to "pay our fare" in Milne. Once we get the habit, we'll pay our way through life, too, and anyway, the more we give, the more, ultimately, we shall get.

Not quite two weeks ago, approximately 450 hungry (for the old routine) and savage (with joy at seeing their friends) students stormed the portals of Milne in their annual quest for academic learning. The halls, which during the summer had heard only the more saucy whispers of the State College summer people, echoed and resounded with the laughter and chatter of the eager horse.

With the opening of school, we met again those friends with whom last year we studied or played and passed or flunked (or the case may be). We met again the people whose friendship and companionship make all the difference in the world between a happy life and a mere existence.

And then we made the acquaintance, a trifle hesitantly, perhaps, of those who, as teachers, will enable us to live our lives even more fully—to create something worthwhile out of them.

Finally, we greeted, some of us for the first time, the supervisors or critics; those grand emblems of stability and encouragement who make the reuniting of school seem almost a home-coming.

"School days, school days, dear (?) old golden..." Do these words sound familiar to you? Undoubtedly you've heard them here and there on the grounds of the Milne School. Once again, you have probably caught yourself humming or whistling them—perhaps in rather pretended disgust. Oh, the cruelty of having to get up so early (without that extra snooze) in order to be at school at the unearthly hour of 8:00 A.M., after lying in bed as long as you wanted to all summer! Just think of all the homewor! Whoever invented that awful word anyway? And the scramble to rush up so many flights of stairs to report at home-room in the last half-minute.

And the new teachers! That is an enlightening thought. One has to admit that it is quite exciting to anticipate them—to wonder what they'll be like—and when they'll send to the office first! (That is not quite so enlightening.) All the new books too. Here you grow again, remembering, that books and homework go together. Then you remember that you'll be able to see all your old classmates again and, not having seen them all summer, you become quite happy at the prospect.

And so, underneath all this pretense, way down deep, aren't you just a little bit glad that school has begun again?

—Carolyn Mattice.
With the commencement of gym classes at Beverwyck last Monday, sports for Milne girls are underway. Hockey has been initiated as the fall sport for the Senior High girls this year, while the Junior High girls will continue with soccer. For most girls it is their first field-hockey experience, but they seem to prefer it to soccer. The Senior High girls meet on Monday, Wednesday; the others on Tuesday and Thursday.

Hockey and soccer are not the sole sports. A diving class has been organized this year and the riding classes of 1st will be continued. There will also be swimming and life-saving classes. All sports are directed by Miss Hitchcock.
