The Mid-Atlantic Regional Archives Conference (MARAC) Spring Conference in Arlington, VA, April 22-24

Archives: In the National Interest

MARAC will be meeting from April 22-24, 2004 at the Key Bridge Marriott in beautiful Arlington, Virginia, just across the Potomac from Georgetown and Washington, DC. The Program Committee has assembled an exciting array of sessions, highlighting the importance of all archival institutions—large or small, public or private, local or national. Session topics include African American communities, women in the military, politicians’ restrictions, archivists’ enhancements, the local history of Arlington, and the national impact of September 11.

Family History in the Capital Region
CAA Spring Program
March 31, 2004, 4:30pm

John Travis, Albany County Historian, will discuss his experience researching family history and assisting researchers. Participants are encouraged to bring questions and share with colleagues how genealogical research and researcher expectations have changed in recent years, particularly with the expansion of the web. Share your experiences with colleagues and learn more about what other institutions in the region are doing!

The program will be held at the Albany County Hall of Records beginning with light refreshments and CAA’s Annual Meeting to elect board members and officers.

Seating is limited. Please RSVP to Amy Schindler at Aschindler@uamail.albany.edu or (518) 437-3934.
With the 21st century underway, it is time to start thinking about how historic records repositories within the Capital District are documenting the 20th century. In the Capital District region, there are approximately 200 historical societies, archives, museums, libraries, and other organizations involved with this endeavor. Important steps need to be taken to ensure the survival and accessibility of the Capital District’s documentary heritage.

In the coming months, the Documentary Heritage Program (DHP) will be distributing a survey that will provide the Capital District Library Council (CDLC) with valuable information to this end. The survey is designed to update administrative information currently in the Directory of Repositories of Historical Documents in the Capital District of New York, identify current and future programming needs, and determine the extent to which area repositories are collecting and caring for 20th century records.

The effectiveness of the DHP programming is dependent upon a good response from the region’s constituent historical records programs.

We look forward to receiving your responses. If you have any questions or comments, please contact Capital District DHP Regional Archivist, Susan D’Entremont at (518) 438-2500.

What Happens if the Sun Sets?

Prior to 1987, the Local Government Records Law was in absolute chaos. The Local Government Records Law placed the responsibility for managing their records with the local governments that generate them. In 1987, the Commissioner of Education was made responsible for regulating and providing technical assistance for LG records.

While most local governments appointed Records Management Officers as required by the law, the financial resources were simply unavailable to carry out their mandated responsibilities.

Local governments and their professional associations came together to form the Local Government Records Management Improvement Fund (LGRMIF) to secure funding to address these problems.

The Fund, which has a present sunset date of 2005, supports, through a competitive grants process, hundreds of projects to improve the management of local government records. It supports the identification and protection of archival records, the deployment of information technologies, the destruction of... obsolete records and the storage of inactive ones.

The Fund also supports a system of regionally based technical assistance, in which State Archives professionals, backed up by content specialists in Albany, staff field offices in Hauppauge, Brooklyn, Poughkeepsie, Albany, Glens Falls, Binghamton, Utica, Rochester and Buffalo. Regional Advisory Officers provide free consultation and technical assistance to 4400 local governments, present 125 (or more) workshops annually and monitor Improvement Fund grants in their respective regions.

The Fund also supports the Documentary Heritage Program, which provides grant funding and technical assistance to colleges and universities, public libraries, and other non-profit organizations that hold and provide access to historical records.

If the sun sets, all this is gone.

Historical records repositories will find that a key source of financial and technical support has vanished.

Local governments will still generate their tons of records each day and with their dwindling tax dollars they will lack the fiscal means and the specialized knowledge to carry on alone.

Unless the State Legislature takes action, the sun will indeed set on the Fund. Archivists, records managers, and others interested in ensuring the Fund’s survival should write or call their elected representatives and urge that the Fund’s sunset date be extended or eliminated. Legislative contact information is listed on the websites of the State Assembly (http://www.assembly.state.ny.us) and State Senate (http://www.senate.state.ny.us/).

University at Albany Libraries Acquires the William Kennedy Papers

The University at Albany has acquired the papers of Pulitzer-prize winning novelist William Kennedy, a collection comprising some 90 boxes of manuscripts, film scripts, and memorabilia. The collection will serve as a resource for scholarly research on Kennedy's literary career, and on the social, political and literary histories of the Capital Region. On October 29, the University Libraries celebrated the acquisition of the Kennedy papers at the New Library, Uptown Campus. The celebration began with a program "The Kennedy Papers - Understanding the Creative Imagination," that consisted of a conversation between William Kennedy and the University at Buffalo's Mark Shechner, Professor of English. Shechner, a noted scholar of contemporary writing, has written on the works of such disparate writers as James Joyce and Philip Roth, and has been a frequent reviewer of William Kennedy's novels.

Kennedy joined the University at Albany English Department in 1974 and is executive director of the UAlbany-based New York State Writers Institute, which he founded. He is the author of eight novels to date, beginning with The Ink Truck. Seven subsequent works form his ongoing Albany Cycle of novels -- all centered on his native Albany during the 19th and 20th centuries. The most recent, Roscoe, was chosen as one of the seven best books of 2002 by the New York Times, and one of the year's eight best books by the American Library Association. Kennedy's Ironweed won the Pulitzer Prize in 1984 and was chosen by the Modern Library as one of the 100 best novels of the 20th century. Other Kennedy works include Legs, Billy Phelan's Greatest Game, Quinn's Book, Very Old Bones, and The Flaming Corsage, as well as two children's books co-authored with his son Brendan, Charlie Malarkey and the Belly Button Machine and Charlie Malarkey and the Singing Moose. He has also published honored with a $100,000 Save America's Treasures grant. The grant will be used to renovate the archives, install a new high density archival shelving system and print 12,000 negatives documenting the early history of the GE Research Laboratory, the first industrial research lab in the world.

In November 2003, the museum received a NYS Library Conservation and Preservation grant of $19,704 to preserve more than 1,000 glass negatives from the personal photograph collection of Charles Steinmetz (1865-1923), a noted chief engineer at GE. At the conclusion of this project the museum will have an interpositive, polyester sheet negative, and print made from each glass negative.

In December 2003, the museum was awarded an NEH Preservation Assistance Grant for $3,494 for a preservation assessment of its film-based collections, including 900 16mm motion picture films and nearly 400,000 sheet film negatives.

Schenectady Museum Plans Regional Music Exhibit for Summer 2004

The Schenectady Museum will present "Factory Bands to Funk: Music in the Capital Region," from June 6-September 13, 2004. The museum is currently seeking artifacts and archival materials relating to the musical history of the region, including ethnic and factory bands of the early 20th century, music organizations that started as public works projects during the Great Depression, jazz musicians, and rock bands of yesterday and today. The exhibit will explore the social aspect of music and the community as well as examine the various creative forces that inspire musicians. For additional information please contact Stephanie Przybylek, Director of Collections and Exhibits at (518) 382-7890, ext. 258.

State Archives Student Research Awards

To encourage students to use historical records, the New York State Archives is sponsoring the 14th annual Student Research Awards. The contest is open to all New York students in grades 4-12 who use historical records in their research projects.

Three awards are presented each year: grades 4-5, grades 6-8, and grades 9-12. The awards consist of a framed certificate, a check for $100 from an endowment established by Regent Emerita Laura Chodos and her husband Robert Chodos, an invitation to have lunch with the Regents in Albany, and a behind-the-scenes tour of the State Archives.

Eligible projects are traditional research papers; exhibits; audiovisual productions; performances; works of fiction or drama; research for a historical marker, property or district; and computer-based entries, such as websites or PowerPoint presentations.

Entries must be postmarked no later than June 1, 2004. Contest guidelines, the entry form, and a color poster are available through the State Archives’ website (http://www.archives.nysed.gov, click “Education”).

Government Records Falsified in Federal Case

by

Warren Broderick
New York State Archives

On February 6, 2004 in United States District Court in Albany, Ronald A. Roberts, aged 56, of Granville, New York, pleaded guilty to felony charges of using a Social Security number that was not his own in a bankruptcy proceeding and in several banking transactions, and submitting false documents to the government in connection with a petition to the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs seeking federal recognition as an American Indian tribal government. Roberts, who sometimes referred to himself as "Chief" or "Sachem Golden Eagle," claimed to be the leader of the "Western Mohegans," a group which has not been recognized by the federal or New York State governments. Sentencing is scheduled for this June.

Evidence submitted by Roberts to the Bureau of Indian Affairs included falsified copies of state government records. A copy of the 1845 state census held by the New York State Archives, in which Native Americans were enumerated by noted ethnologist Henry R. Schoolcraft, was altered to indicate the presence of "New York Mohegans" (including an ancestor of Roberts) living in Washington County. James D. Folts, supervisor of reference services, testified regarding differences between the altered copy and the original census record. Roberts had also presented an altered copy of a 1938 death record obtained from the Town of Hartford indicating that his grandfather, Arthur E. Smith, was an "Indian." The official copy of this death record, maintained on microfilm by the State Department of Health, shows Mr. Smith to have been "White." The death record belonging to the Town of Hartford appears to contain unauthorized alterations. In addition, falsified genealogical records and a diary of questionable accuracy were submitted as part of Roberts' application for tribal recognition for the "Western Mohegans."

The actual "Mohegans" are headquartered in eastern Connecticut and have established a well-known casino and resort in Uncasville. The actual "Mohicans" (now known officially as the "Stockbridge-Munsee band"), first made famous in the title of James Fenimore Cooper's novel, Last of the Mohicans, are an Indian nation who lived in the Hudson Valley (from central Dutchess County north to the Adirondacks) and in adjacent western New England. Currently headquartered on land near Green Bay, Wisconsin, the Mohicans maintain an active interest in their New York State heritage. Both the Mohegans and Mohicans operate historical repositories and cultural centers on their respective reservations.
