In Article VIII of the Public Works Law, Section 230 deals with the hours and wages of employees who work for private contractors performing public works. As you are driving along in your automobile, you are riding on roads that were built by private firms with public funds. The State of New York or political subdivision contracted for this work with private firms who specialize in these fields. On this same trip, you will pass the same roads that were built by private firms. These are roads that small and groups of men working with hand tools who are maintaining these same facilities. Some of this yellow and blue equipment will be passing trucks and other equipment painted yellow and blue, along the road adjacent to this project there is another smaller sand and salt the highways to make them safe for other people. Recall that relief you felt when you heard that big plow banging up the hill to clean out the drifts so that you could drive to work the next day. Did you ever think about the man who was driving the truck or "riding the win" equipment — that he's a family man and he'd rather be home toasting his shins and looking at TV, if he could. The one year's residence requirement was fixed by the commissioner of the maintenance furnished. He is a member of the executive committee and board of directors of the Newspaper Bureau of Advertising, the Associated Press and Central Committee of Audit of the New York Times.

What the Law States

A basic principle of wages in public service is "equal pay for equal work." This does not mean identical wages for identical work. There are groups of men on each of these projects operating big and small equipment or working with hand tools. They are performing like work, but at substantially differing rates.

An examination of the basis upon which these wages are established shows that the prevailing wage in the area is obtained through a conference in which the public officials and the labor unions agree to pay so much to maintain your highways in safe operating condition. Many of these men have to get out at all hours during the winter months to sand and salt the highways to make them safe for other people. Remember, they go ahead of you over short-ice roads at all hours day and night. Those of you who live along a country road may recall that relief you felt when you heard that big plow banging up the hill to clean out the drifts so that you could drive to work the following day. Did you ever think about the man who was driving the truck or "riding the win" equipment — that he's a family man and he'd rather be home toasting his shins and looking at TV, if he could?

The Court in its opinion said: "This is the case of B. and the this and the companion case of Doak v. United States was decided in the same manner. It was made in the course of the preparation of chapter news sheets for the玩家. The LEADER as early as possible every week.

Repeal of Whitten Rider Hinges on Permanent Plan

One of the most vexing problems before the U. S. Civil Service Commission is the creation of a career service that is flexible and responsive to new demands. The Whitten Amendment is the latest attempt to meet this challenge. The amendment, if passed, would eliminate the "indefinite" employee, who is employed at the discretion of the department head, except that the employee would also have the right to appeal to the Civil Service Commission for a permanent appointment. However, the amendment would not affect the status of the current indefinite employees, who are already employed on a temporary basis.

The Whitten Commission is currently studying the implementation of the Whitten Amendment. The Commission is expected to make a final report in the near future, which will be presented to Congress for consideration.

The amendment would also allow for the creation of a new category of employees, known as "permanent" employees, who would be hired on a competitive basis and would have the right to appeal to the Civil Service Commission for a permanent appointment. The amendment would also allow for the creation of a new category of employees, known as "permanent" employees, who would be hired on a competitive basis and would have the right to appeal to the Civil Service Commission for a permanent appointment.
