Counties face fiscal woes, state next?

Story on Page 3
NEW YORK CITY — “Union Pride,” a CSEA/AFSCME sponsored dog statue, part of an American Kennel Club program to raise funds for search and rescue dogs, is now on display in front of the CSEA Region Office in New York City. The statues commemorate the canine search and rescue teams that took part in the recovery at Ground Zero.

The idea for sponsorship of a CSEA dog came from Finger Lakes DESSO Local President Kathy Button and was promoted by CSEA Executive Vice President Mary Sullivan.

Union Pride, wearing a green AFSCME T-shirt, will remain outside the Metro Region office on Fulton Street in Manhattan into the holiday season and then will make visits to CSEA Offices in other parts of the state. Numerous other dog statues are on display throughout New York City. Region President George Boncoraglio and other members of the region’s Executive Board pose with Union Pride above.

CSEA President Danny Donohue to visit Long Island Region

CSEA President Danny Donohue will visit the CSEA Long Island Region on Friday, Dec. 6 to meet with members.

The meetings will be held at the CSEA Long Island Region office, 3 Garet Place, Commack.

Donohue will meet with union members from 1 to 7 p.m. Please call the Long Island Region office at (631) 462-0639 to sign up for a visit and for directions.

Corrections

In a story that appeared in the September edition of the Work Force on the Nassau County Sheriff’s Department, Deputy Sheriff Mark Simon was incorrectly identified in a photograph as Christopher Scholz.

The photo on page 5 in the October Work Force involved Schenectady day care workers addressing funding issues before a County Legislative hearing with CSEA support; the adjacent story involved CSEA’s legislative efforts on behalf of Schenectady Family Health Services.

3 CSEA members die on the job

CSEA mourns the loss of three more CSEA members who recently died in September and October on the job, bringing the total to eight deaths for the year.

SUNY Buffalo fatality
Most recently, David Schrader, 48, a SUNY Buffalo employee for 25 years, was killed on Oct. 16 when a steam line valve on which he was operating, burst. He was working in the basement of Crosby Hall on the school’s South Campus when the accident occurred.

Public Employee Safety and Health (PESH) investigators were at the scene along with Local President Ken Penski, and the local’s occupational safety and health representative, Rick Pershell.

CSEA’s Occupational Safety and Health Department is investigating the accident. The investigation is continuing. Issues that are being considered are: confined space entry procedures, asbestos release from the steam pressure and friable asbestos in the steam tunnels.

Mr. Shrader was married and has one son in college. He had worked at the university for 25 years.

Ulster County worker dies
A longtime employee of the Ulster County Highway Department died Oct. 2. Richard T. Neal, 65, lost consciousness while driving a dump truck, causing the vehicle to leave the road, roll down an embankment and strike a tree.

Police did not know why Neal lost consciousness but later determined that Neal had died of natural causes.

CSEA’s Occupational Safety and Health specialists investigated the accident.

Neal is survived by his wife, four sons and three grandchildren.

Rockland fatality
On Sept. 30, Barbara Netel, a Rockland County CSEA member died. Netel, 41, worked at Building A of the Dr. Robert L. Yeager Health Center. On the day of her death, the Health Center building was evacuated after a leak in a broken sewage pipe.

A medical examiner ruled that her death was from an existing condition and not related to the building's evacuation.

CSEA praised the county for its response to the situation and subsequent evacuation of the building, noting that the county followed all safety procedures to the letter.

Netel is survived by her husband and two young children.

CSEA statewide board member Frank D’Allesandro dies

Frank D’Allesandro, president of the CSEA Oneida County Local, passed away unexpectedly on Sept. 20. D’Allesandro was a union activist for many of the 26 years he was a CSEA member. He served as president of the CSEA city unit and as a member of the CSEA statewide Board of Directors and was a Navy veteran. He is survived by his wife, Janice, and daughter Nicole D’Allesandro.

Budget battles begin

CSEA members across the state have been taking to the streets to fight against threatened layoffs in their communities as local governments grapple with revenue shortfalls and budgets decimated by state funding inequities.

The hardest hit counties form a line of red ink across upstate New York — Erie, Monroe, Niagara, Onondaga, and Albany all are considering drastic action to make ends meet.

Downstate counties are not immune, either, including Nassau County, which has been in crisis for several years but now is reeling from revenue shortfalls.

“Our message is quite simple: One layoff is too many,” said CSEA President Danny Donohue.

“We were warning about this two years ago when the state was trying its best to spend the budget surplus. We received tax cuts instead of guarantees that the money would be there when we needed it,” Donohue said.

Medicaid costs

The difficulties stem from a variety of factors but largely from new health-care costs imposed by state programs. The expanded Medicaid programs like Child Health Plus and Family Health Plus are increasing localities’ share of Medicaid costs at a time when the sluggish economy, shortchanges in state aid and the fallout from Sept. 11 are all adding to fiscal difficulties.

Unlike most states, New York requires counties to pay a quarter of Medicaid costs. So every time the state adds a Medicaid program, counties wind up footing much of the bill. Onondaga County, which includes the city of Syracuse, has proposed raising property taxes 6.5 percent and eliminating 65 to 70 county jobs. Jim Moore, CSEA Central Region President, declared the threat of job cuts “unacceptable.”

In Rochester, chanting to the mantra of “cuts hurt families,” 200 Monroe County workers turned out to protest the Monroe County executive’s budget cuts and demonstrators also picketed a county Legislature meeting.

When the county Legislature meeting began, CSEA members filled the room to overflow capacity, as speaker after speaker urged restoration of services and reconsideration of county priorities.

The county is trying to fill a $23 million budget gap this year and as much as a $65 million shortfall next year. The county executive vowed not to raise taxes and instead wants to eliminate 700 positions and cut many current services. CSEA represents about 2,700 of the county’s 5,000 employees.

Layoffs don’t work

CSEA Unit President Jim Volpone presented a comprehensive position paper that showed the futility and backfire effect of layoffs. He also praised the county work force as “hardworking, lean and efficient.”

Meanwhile, CSEA members in Niagara and Ontario counties rallied at their county legislatures recently in protest of services and job cuts.

The Niagara County Unit marched for the second time in two weeks, as the legislature continues pressing all departments for deep cuts in budgets for next year. Unit leaders have maintained that the cuts will make delivery of services extremely difficult, if not impossible.

Ontario County members protested earlier this past summer, and felt they had beaten back any more layoff threats. But the county has again raised the threat of layoffs. The CSEA unit has also posted online, a budget analysis that shows the county in good enough fiscal shape to avoid laying anyone off.

With layoffs threatened across the state at the local level, what does the future hold for the state? After the elections in November, a gloomy forecast may be in the works at the state level. Some estimates suggest the state is facing an $8 billion to $10 billion dollar shortfall.
Make a difference — vote!

This Election Day the choice is clear for CSEA members and you can make a difference in the future of New York, if you vote.

The CSEA ticket running for statewide offices has a proven record of accomplishment and concern for working people.

CSEA members have enthusiastically embraced CSEA’s choice of Carl McCall from Long Island to Jamestown (see story pages 10-11). There is no more qualified candidate and no finer person than Carl McCall.

Most importantly, Carl McCall and his lieutenant governor running mate Dennis Mehiel truly embody their campaign theme of education, hope and opportunity. They will work hard every day to ensure that our schools have the resources to deliver a first rate education to all New Yorkers. They will work hard to ensure that economic development and opportunity will come to all parts of the state.

New York faces serious economic uncertainty ahead. The effects of poor budget and policy priorities in recent years have been compounded by a sluggish economy and the fallout from 9/11. The effects are already hurting localities across the state and the full impact on the state will likely come to light, shortly after Election Day (see story page 3).

That’s why it is so important to elect Carl McCall as governor. Then we can at least be sure of some fairness and respect as he deals with the crisis.

For the same reason CSEA has endorsed Alan Hevesi for New York state comptroller. CSEA members know that electing a comptroller who can be trusted to protect and preserve the retirement fund for New York’s public employees is especially important to CSEA members.

CSEA is also endorsing Elliot Spitzer for re-election as attorney general. He is everything that an attorney general should be and works hard to make sure that the interests of all New Yorkers are protected or advanced. CSEA is proud to support him because we know he will continue to do the job right.

On Tuesday, Nov. 5 remember: The polls mean nothing, good or bad. Your support for candidates means nothing … until you, your friends and family all demonstrate you’ve got the power in our democracy by getting out and voting. Then we all win.
Pataki silent on CSEA’s call to halt mentally ill’s mistreatment

ALBANY — CSEA President Danny Donohue has launched a new offensive in the union’s continuing assault on the Pataki Administration’s neglect of the mental health system.

“The moral bankruptcy of the state’s mental health policies demand immediate and extraordinary measures,” Donohue said. “It is no surprise to anyone who has been involved in the mental health system that the state has failed to live up to its obligation to adequately care for people with mental illness. CSEA has been making that point to lawmakers and the news media for a generation. What is shocking is how coldly and systematically the state’s mental health officials have dumped patients without any meaningful attempt to improve their care or living conditions.”

“Scandal after scandal has been disclosed regarding the Office of Mental Health’s irresponsible mistreatment of individuals inside and outside the system, yet there is still no movement toward any comprehensive reform,” Donohue said.

“CSEA has no confidence in the leadership of the Office of Mental Health and has called on Governor Pataki to personally intervene. His silence to this call remains deafening.”

“We need to see a real commitment to overall, coordinated reform,” Donohue said. “It is not enough to deal with the system piecemeal — that’s why we have such a fragmented and deficient system now.”

A continuing series of articles in the New York Times has reported on the quiet dumping of psychiatric patients into locked wards of nursing homes, which were left virtually unregulated by the administration. They follow on the heels of reports last spring showing the administration has been dumping other patients into substandard living conditions in poorly maintained and regulated adult homes. In both sets of circumstances, the individuals rarely received therapeutic treatment for their mental illness.

The governor has repeatedly avoided direct questioning about the scandals but at press time he defended the nursing home dumping as appropriate placements. CSEA’s candidate Carl McCall has called for a U.S. Justice Department probe of the practice. But for CSEA the bigger issue is the continuing lack of an overall plan for the reform of the system to fill serious service gaps and create a future balance between inpatient and outpatient community based care.

CSEA recently joined with the Mental Health Association to issue a report detailing the broken promise of New York’s commitment to create an effective, balanced system of community based care for people with mental illness, which was made in 1978 during the administration of then-Gov. Hugh Carey.

The Carey administration committed the state to developing a better system of care for individuals with mental retardation and developmental disabilities and for individuals with mental illness. The promise has largely been met in the Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities.

The Office of Mental Health on the other hand has totally abandoned its commitment and responsibilities resulting in a system that is a national disgrace.

The Mental Health Association of New York State’s report, “The Unfinished Promise of Willowbrook,” curiously echoes a report CSEA released in 1984 urging the state to develop a comprehensive system of care that would ensure a spectrum of care that would be humane and cost-effective.

Members speak out on need for reform

Crippen — Les Crippen, Mental Hygiene Therapy Aide, 32 years

“The state’s OMH facilities already have a staff that knows what they are doing. Who else has the experienced and caring people to help those that need it? The system needs people who know how to take care of today’s psychiatric patient. Patients can say one thing, and do another. Drug and alcohol patients who have psychosis could get worse without the proper supervision. State staff are helping their patients become ready for the transition to community living. But we don’t want to send them to some of the “dumps” that are out there masquerading as providers.”

Jackson — Gwen Jackson, Licensed Practical Nurse, 24 years

State-designated OMH group homes should be staffed by those who have the experience and training to work with and help today’s psychiatric patients. That means the very people who currently are staffing the state’s psych centers. It would facilitate the patients’ ability to stay in the community, without going through the vicious cycle of being released into the community without supervision, failing to take their medications, and getting into trouble, and being readmitted. It would be a permanent revolving door system, if left to private providers. OMH outpatients need more support and supervision, and there needs to be more case managers overseeing their care.”
CMS fires workers – CSEA fights workers back

ALBANY — Nearly 100 CSEA protesters rallied and then filled an Albany County Legislature meeting recently to demand that five contracted workers in the Albany County Jail be given back their jobs.

The action follows a well-attended press conference at the jail, at which CSEA President Danny Donohue and several area elected officials spoke on behalf of the fired workers.

The five workers, currently not represented by the union, were fired for participating in a Sept. 12 organizing rally.

CSEA activists spoke to the county legislators demanding that the workers be reinstated and that the contracted company, Correctional Medical Services (CMS), voluntarily recognize the union.

In reaction to the protest, the Legislature passed a resolution urging CMS to take back the workers but many legislators went even further to suggest that if these workers were not returned to their jobs by next month’s meeting, the contract with CMS should be severed.

“CMS must and will reinstate these workers to their previous positions and recognize their right to join CSEA,” Donohue said. “It’s not a matter of what CMS believes, it’s a matter of the rights granted to these five workers under the law,” Donohue added.

“Job security is a concern,” Stephanie Spear, a physician’s assistant at the jail, told an area newspaper, the Troy Record.

“These contracts with the county are up every three years and without a union, we have no assurance we will be kept on,” Spear said.

Months-long fight

CSEA protested loudly earlier this year when the Albany County Legislature discussed hiring Correctional Medical Services (CMS) to provide health care to inmates at the Albany County Jail.

CSEA warned that CMS was anti-union and had a track record of union busting all over the country.

The legislature decided to move ahead and hire CMS but assured CSEA and the workers that union busting would not be tolerated. Now, six months later, fears have turned to reality and five nurses have been fired.

Nearly all seventeen employees working for CMS inside the jail signed cards to join CSEA. CMS refused to recognize them and a rally of support was organized. The Sept. 12 rally was attended by approximately thirty supporters, mostly from CSEA and other area labor unions.

During the rally, CMS monitored the employees who were marching on their time off.

The next day, five employees who attended the rally were escorted out of the building and terminated. CMS cites the employees’ participation in what they deem an “illegal picket” as grounds for the firings.

CMS is using a caveat of a federal law that requires 10 days’ notice prior to picketing a healthcare facility.

CSEA contends that a jail is not a healthcare facility, that the “picket” was a rally and that the NLRB has no jurisdiction over the jail because it is a county facility.

CSEA also filed charges against CMS for unlawful surveillance, unlawful interrogation and intimidation.

The interest from the press has been considerable. The fired workers spoke to the media and said that they appreciated the support they were receiving from CSEA.

They also said that they did nothing wrong and that they hoped to be reinstated.

As of press time, CMS had not reinstated the workers. Additional rallies have been planned.

Doctor raps CMS

Dr. Trevor Letchmare, who worked under CMS at the jail, said that CMS was guilty of cutting corners in order to maximize profits.

The doctor made claims to the Albany County Legislature that he was encouraged to skip certain prescription medications and to avoid sending inmates to the emergency room.

Letchmare testified that he was directed not to prescribe pain medication to a female inmate, which was ordered by the inmate’s specialist at Albany Medical Center.

The doctor said he refused CMS’ directions not to prescribe the medication, calling CMS’ actions unethical and inappropriate.

WEST BABYLON — Small handprints finger-painted in crayon colors decorate the bulletin board of Aline Paul’s corner in Forest Avenue Elementary School’s main office in West Babylon.

The handprints serve as reminders of the dozen years that she and the other main office secretaries have been shepherding children from kindergarten to the fifth grade.

“It’s like being a mom to 400 children,” said Paul. “We’re responsible for the class lists and keeping track of the students; any test scores they have, early dismissals, as well as communicating with parents and teachers,” she said. The secretaries also order all the supplies in the building, from paper clips to textbooks and furniture.

By the end of October, Paul and the office staff are just beginning to catch their breath after the annual fall rush.

Fast-paced

What’s it like? “Very hectic,” said Mulder. Some of those records will eventually travel a few blocks away to West Babylon Junior High School where Marilyn Barthel has been secretary to the principal for 11 years. Barthel says she usually doesn’t deal directly with the 1,200 students here, unless they’re in trouble, and are sent to the principal’s office.

Barthel coordinates the huge mailings that go out periodically to students and their families several times a year. During a recent visit, Barthel was working on the mailing for student activities that will go out next month.

And she said it’s no easier in the summertime. “My summer mailing takes the better part of the summer. People think that because school is closed we don’t do anything, but that’s not so. Sometimes I have so much to do that when I go home I don’t even want to see the mail!”

Then there are reports to the superintendent, the cleaning out of files, interviewing candidates for staff positions, and I get to keep everybody happy!”

as well as answering the phone, which never stops ringing. “Everything comes through here, so when I can, I scream for help with things like the photocopying. But I love it, I really do,” she said.

Although it can get hairy at times, Barthel says she’s glad to serve the public and grateful to have the backing of CSEA.

“I’m happy to be in the union. I feel that if I needed them, if I was being abused or mistreated, I would have somewhere to go. Of course that doesn’t apply to me here. But just the thought is comforting. How does that saying go? All for one and one for all!”

Rally targets mayor’s scheme

GLENS FALLS — More than 100 CSEA members rallied at the Common Council Meeting in Glens Fall to protest the contracting out of jobs at the Department of Public Works (DPW).

The mayor recently issued a request for proposals (RFP), to private firms to do the job currently performed by more than 35 CSEA members. The RFP was distributed without consulting CSEA or Common Council members. The proposals are to be returned by Nov. 15.

CSEA members acted swiftly upon hearing the news concerning the contracting out proposal. At an Oct. 10 Common Council meeting, CSEA members staged a rally with more than 100 members and supporters waiving banners, holding CSEA posters and chanting “Keep DPW Public.”

CSEA members poured into the meeting room at the start of the Common Council meeting. Some marchers stayed outside to continue the rally momentum. Cheers and honking horns of support were heard while the meeting progressed.

“[Contracting out] is a bad deal for everyone who pays taxes, depends on public services and wants a strong local economy that offers opportunity for working families,” said CSEA Capital Region President Kathy Garrison.

“Make no mistake about it, contracting out will cost more money. It will mean cutting corners on quality. And, it will hurt the economy in our community by eliminating jobs,” said Garrison.

CSEA members pack the Glens Falls Common Council Meeting to protest contracting out of jobs at the Department of Public Works.

DPW Unit President, Danny Knight commented that budget shortfalls are creating an “open season” on public employees.

“I’m tired of hearing politicians talk about [contracting out] like it’s some magical solution that’s going to solve all these problems and save money,” said Knight. “I don’t buy it. I’m tired of being treated as a coat that needs to be reduced. We are the front-line service providers in this city and we should be treated as resources and partners, not costs.”

The crowd responded with resounding applause to all speakers, including two local residents who spoke in support of the DPW “family.”

Organizers hailed the rally a big success and pledged to continue the battle as long as it takes to fight back the rising tide of contracting out union jobs.

CSEA member averts spread of dangerous fire

WHITE FACE MOUNTAIN — An alert and quick-thinking CSEA member who was the first to notice smoke from a fire on Little Whiteface Mountain is being credited with preventing the fire from raging out of control.

On the evening of Sunday, Aug. 18, CSEA member Melissa Lawrence was assisting riders at the gondola station that carries tourists to the summit of Little Whiteface. Around 4:40 p.m., Lawrence noticed a puff of smoke near the top of the mountain. She immediately called her supervisors to alert them of the situation.

Quick evacuation ordered

Within minutes, visitors and staff were ushered off the mountain. Operations were shut down and the mountain remained closed for two days while the fire was being fought.

Fighting the fire was a group effort. Staff utilized a snow machine to douse the flames while the state police coordinated aerial bucket drops. Officers from the Department of Environmental Conservation worked side by side with firefighters from the Lake Placid and Wilmington departments. Machine operators bulldozed the fire line over rough terrain.

Fire brought under control

Finally, on Monday the fire was brought under control. On Tuesday the last of the flames were extinguished. Whiteface Mountain opened for business again that Wednesday.

“The conditions on the mountain that day were so dry, it was like a “tinderbox,” said Olympic Regional Development Authority spokesman Sandy Caligiore. “Because of Melissa Lawrence’s actions when it was just a puff of smoke, we were able to get to it before it got out of control.”

A careless smoker on a scenic gondola ride was blamed for starting the six-acre brush fire that broke out on the Adirondack’s Whiteface Mountain.

Cafeteria workers cut contracted fat

FREDONIA — Cancel the cafeteria contractors. Hold off on the RFPs.

CSEA members of the Fredonia Schools unit pushed for — and have been given the green light to continue working for — a full school year to bring the cafeteria budget out of deficit status.

The district’s request for proposals (RFP) was therefore canceled.

“These dedicated workers deserve a chance to continue doing the job without a profit-driven private contractor in charge,” said Labor Relations Specialist Penny Gleason.

“They took over deficit-laden cafeteria operations in mid-term last year and did a good job toward reducing the deficit. We made a presentation to the board, and lobbied them to cancel their RFP, so we could begin with a full school year ahead and continue making efficient strides.”

The presentation by Gleason, Unit President Mary Epolito and member Judy Oakes was well-received and brought a statement of support by the interim superintendent, Charles Pegan.

“We have been encouraged with the progress made under the guidance of Judy Oakes and Mary Ellen Epolito and this change in management. They are moving in the right direction, and I have pledged to work with them,” Pegan said.

“This means the 22 cafeteria workers (in the 93-member unit) can do their work without the cloud of a profit motive hanging over their jobs,” said Gleason.

“We’re very happy the board has shown confidence in us,” said Epolito. “But there will be a need for investment in more up-to-date equipment. We’re working with equipment that is 30 years old or more. But we’re going to do all we can to do the job right.”

Bus drivers victory international news

JOHNSTOWN — CSEA’s successful campaign to prevent contracting out busing at the Greater Johnstown School District has gained international attention.

CSEA’s international union, AFSCME, was so impressed by the union drivers’ victory that it will feature the story in an upcoming issue of AFSCME Public Employee magazine. AFSCME’s official publication which reaches 1.3 million readers across the country.

District officials recommended contracting out school bus runs earlier this year because of a driver shortage and an expiring lease on the district’s bus garage.

CSEA proposed viable alternatives to contracting out and launched an aggressive public relations campaign comparing the safety records of district drivers with those of drivers employed by the private contractor bidding to take over the runs.

The school board voted to keep the district drivers after dozens of CSEA members and concerned parents spoke out against contracting out.

CSEA Mechanics Gary Henry and Richard Lynam also had a stake in the fight against contracting out.
CSEA stumps for union-friendly ticket as Election Day draws near

The election efforts for CSEA-endorsed candidates for pension fund, the CSEA's enthusiasm for McCall at the top of the ticket continues to rise. CSEA members have embraced McCall's message of education, hope and opportunity at campaign stops across the state. With a tight race at hand, every vote will be critical to the McCall victory in November.

CSEA activists are encouraged to speak at local, unit and general membership meetings as well as executive board meetings on behalf of McCall and the entire CSEA endorsed ticket. New volunteers are being added every day to the current CSEA volunteer base. But more are needed.

Above, Carl McCall with running mate Dennis Mehiel at his side, takes his message of education, hope and opportunity to the people.

CSEA activists have been quick to notify members to turn out in support of McCall at rallies, debates and appearances. McCall himself has noted in several public speeches that wherever he goes, CSEA members in green T-shirts are there to greet him. In Syracuse, John Harbin, a McCall supporter and president of the CSEA SUNY Health Science Center Local attended a McCall rally at his campaign headquarters. "I anticipate doing phone banks, door to door campaigning, basically whatever it takes to get this man elected," he said. "Carl McCall has proven himself to be an advocate for the working men and women of New York State and I feel he’s the one candidate for office of governor that will follow through with the commitments he makes to us," he added.

Carl McCall is ready to lead our state. For the past 10 years he has brought us results and worked hard for CSEA members. Now it’s our turn to support him.

Contact your Regional Political Action Coordinator for information on volunteering and be sure to vote for Carl McCall and the CSEA ticket — Dennis Mehiel for lieutenant governor, Eliot Spitzer for attorney general and Alan Hevesi for comptroller — on Election Day, Tuesday, Nov. 5.

CSEA’s endorsement of Alan Hevesi brings the union’s full support to a candidate whose election is critical to CSEA members. The 255,000 members of CSEA and their families will work hard to elect Alan Hevesi. Our endorsement brings with it a field operation of workers from one end of the state to the other," said CSEA President Danny Donohue. As sole trustee of the $105 billion state pension fund, the comptroller oversees the second largest fund in the nation. Electing a comptroller who will protect and preserve the retirement fund for New York’s public employees is especially important to CSEA members.

While serving in the New York State Assembly for 22 years, Hevesi had a consistent pro-labor voting record. Hevesi’s opponent in the race had a consistent anti-labor record. He supported legislation that would have eliminated jobs that were performed by public employees. In addition, he voted against several CSEA supported retirement reforms in recent years, including CSEA’s tier reinstatement bill and tier equity bill. That’s why CSEA is vigorously supporting Hevesi.

“The Get-Out-The-Vote (GOTV) operations just getting underway on Election Day are critical to our endorsed ticket. It is time for each and every CSEA activist to volunteer.” said CSEA President Danny Donohue. “Please consider giving at least a few nights at a phone bank or assisting at a literature drop in support of our candidates. Our efforts will make a difference on Election Day.”
CSEA remembers four slain workers, calls for passage of security standard

WATKINS GLEN — On the 10th anniversary of the tragic death of four Schuyler County women who were murdered simply because they were doing their job, CSEA called on the state to do more to protect its workers.

On Oct. 15, 1992, Florence Pike, Phyllis Caslin, Nancy Wheeler and Denise Miller Van Amburg, four CSEA members employed at the Schuyler County Department of Social Services, were gunned down in cold blood by a “deadbeat dad” angered that the agency had garnished his wages.

“Within a few tragic minutes on Oct. 15, 1992, Schuyler County became the symbol of the need for increased work site security in public places across the nation,” CSEA President Danny Donohue said.

“The Schuyler County tragedy provided a lesson that should last forever, never to be forgotten. Ten years ago today, CSEA pledged to honor the memory of these four women by leading the fight to make every job site in New York state a safer place to work,” Donohue said.

That pledge resulted in a proposed Workplace Security Standard, which the union submitted to the state Department of Labor in 1994. The proposed standard would have required employers with more than 50 employees to analyze dangers, educate employees and make improvements to protect their employees against workplace violence.

But Donohue said the Department of Labor refused to implement the standard, based on a questionable cost basis alone, sending a bad message to working people across the state.

“The Department of Labor had a chance to lead the country by implementing these proactive, positive guidelines,” Donohue said.

“And its dismissal of the proposed standard ignores the very real security risks in New York work sites.” Ironically, terrorism concerns in recent months have led to implementation of many measures included in the CSEA standard.

State refuses review of standard

Many localities have adopted measures similar to the standard CSEA developed and the state is once again reviewing the union’s proposal.

Donohue said public employees have the, often unpleasant, responsibility for carrying out policy decisions made by others.

The state must accept its responsibility to protect those public employees on the front lines, Donohue said.

“CSEA will continue to fight for security improvements in public work sites throughout the state so that no family will ever again have to suffer through a senseless tragedy like the families of our fallen union sisters in Schuyler County,” Donohue pledged.

Bringing up baby — baby panda that is

SYRACUSE — CSEA member Kate Hannon says she’s gotten used to the late-night feedings, the added responsibility of another mouth to feed, and the nervous worrying over the baby’s health. She’s enjoyed watching him get his first teeth. It’s the claws that have bothered her a little, though.

The claws? Well, Hannon’s not exactly a new mother … she’s just the primary caretaker for one of the latest arrivals at Onondaga County’s Rosamond Gifford Zoo. Banshi, a very rare red panda was born earlier this summer at the zoo.

Banshi, now about the size of a large cat, was one of only 14 red panda births in the United States this year, and is one of only seven that survived. There are thought to be less than 2,000 in existence worldwide. Due to an injury sustained from his natural mother, Hannon, a CSEA member and zoo attendant for the past nine years, has taken over the duties and is hand-raising him. A mother herself, she says it’s like having another child.

“You’re there first hand for all of his development. You know when all his teeth come in. It’s the same responsibility that you have with a child,” she says.

As Banshi’s primary caretaker, she even takes him home with her five nights a week. At first she was feeding him every three hours by bottle, and not sleeping very well, nervous over his health. Her nervousness was compounded by the fact that Banshi had a sister that didn’t survive.

“It’s hard when they’re little because you’re so worried about how they’re doing and their health. I didn’t sleep very well. I would compare it to being a nervous new mom,” she said.

Not to worry though, Banshi has been thriving from the start. “He’s a beast,” said Hannon with a laugh, referring to his above-average weight gain.

Hannon said that although the zoo staff try hard to keep baby animals with their natural parents, when that becomes impossible, it’s a nice perk for the staff.

“Hand-raising is one of the perks. We all have that little bunny-hugger in us,” she said.

And ever the proud parent, Hannon makes sure she brings photos with her to family events to show off her new “child.” She says her real daughter loves watching Banshi, too.

Hannon got the “new mom” job because of her expertise in dealing with pandas. Some of this came from a workshop she attended at the Knoxville Zoo in Tennessee, renowned as the leading experts in panda care.

Now, says Hannon, one of the hardest parts about raising Banshi is knowing that he’ll probably be placed in another zoo by this time next year, to help assist in another zoo’s breeding program.

“I know he’s going to go to a good place, so as long as I keep that in mind, I’m OK,” she said.

Some of the best horses in Saratoga aren’t at the track

SARATOGA SPRINGS — CSEA members working in the city’s Department of Public Works quietly took pride this summer in seeing their work enjoyed by young and old.

In fact, one of the biggest attractions in the Spa City this summer — along with the ballerinas from New York City, the orchestra from Philadelphia and the famed Thoroughbreds, all of which have left for their winter homes — is staying in its new home in Congress Park.

The newly restored Kaydeross Carousel debuted on June 29 with much public fanfare. Hundreds waited in line for a chance to take a ride.

Getting the carousel up and running in time for the busy summer season was a monumental task for the CSEA crew. Especially when you consider that the carousel hadn’t been ridden in 15 years and was in hundreds of pieces when the project began.

Beginning last year and working straight through June, CSEA members worked to restore and paint the horses, clean and repair the mechanical parts and assist in the construction of the building that houses the carousel.

And their work has not gone unnoticed. The New York Conference of Mayors and Municipal Officials selected the carousel for one of its Pride in Public Works Awards.

The carousel itself dates back to the turn of the century and had previously graced a now defunct amusement park on the shore of Saratoga Lake.

Now that the hectic summer season has come to an end, the DPW employees can finally take a breath. They can also take a bow for their hard work in bringing back something that is bringing joy to so many.

14 years ago...

The year was 1988 and ballots were barely counted after Election Day when then-Gov. Mario Cuomo announced a “November Surprise.” Sunny budget forecasts during the election season suddenly gave way to the reality of a $1.9 billion budget deficit that would require a hiring freeze and other draconian measures to address.

It was the beginning of a multi-year fight that would pit CSEA against the governor on a range of issues including layoffs, cuts in aid to schools and localities, an attempted raid on the state pension system (which CSEA stopped in court), and a protracted state contract campaign.

CSEA’s attempts to stand firm against the governor’s cutbacks and demands required all of the union’s strength and member resourcefulness.

Also in 1988:

- Brian Boitano wins the gold medal in the mens figure skating competition in the Winter Olympics held in Calgary, Canada.
- “Rain Man” wins the 61st Academy Award for best picture.
- The World Health Organization begins World AIDS Day.
- The Soviet Union is at war with Afghanistan.
- In the presidential elections, George Bush Sr. beats Michael Dukakis.
- Flying from London to New York City, PanAm Flight 103 crashes into the Scottish village of Lockerbie. All 244 passengers, 15 crew members and 11 people on the ground were killed.
CSEA helps set labor agenda for Hudson Valley

NEW WINDSOR — As one of the Hudson Valley Area Labor Federation’s largest affiliates, CSEA is playing a major role in shaping the future of organized labor.

At the federation’s recent, first delegates meeting, CSEA members constituted 49 of the 115 voting delegates.

"CSEA’s role in the Area Labor Federation shows that there is a strong interest amongst our members in building up labor," said Diane Hewitt, CSEA Southern Region President and executive vice president of the federation.

The delegates meeting also attracted many state and local political leaders and candidates who are friendly to labor, including U.S. Rep. Maurice Hinchey, State Attorney General Eliot Spitzer and State Comptroller candidate Alan Hevesi, all of whom addressed the meeting.

One year after the inception of the Hudson Valley ALF, labor is gaining political strength and solidarity in the Hudson Valley. The ALF is an alliance of the five central labor councils that include 110,000 members and 250 union locals in seven Hudson Valley counties.

Over the past year, ALF affiliates have assisted CSEA with as demonstrations at the site of the new Price Chopper in Newburgh.

One area in which labor is seeking to gain more power is in political action.

At the ALF meeting, Hewitt introduced a political action resolution in which the federation is seeking to increase voter registration among union members by 10 percent. The resolution, which passed also requires endorsed candidates to support labor by advocating for the right to organize and working to revise the Taylor Law to abolish strike bans on public employees.

CSEA members enthusiastically turned out for the Capital District Labor Parade held in late September. Marchers walked through the city of Albany to Washington Park to gather for speakers, food, music and a formal presentation.

Labor Religion Coalition offers gift giving idea

The New York State Labor Religion Coalition has a wonderful gift giving opportunity just in time for the holidays.

Border Witness chronicles the experiences of a delegation of young people from across New York state as they travel in northern Mexican communities. The book is in English and Spanish with more than 50 powerful photos. It is available for $30 plus $3.50 shipping and handling.

The Labor Religion Coalition is a growing alliance of religious institutions, unions – including CSEA, community and youth groups, individuals, and academics, who share a commitment to economic justice.

Pro-union law targets union-busting

Legislation originally initiated by CSEA that prohibits employers from using state funds to discourage union-organizing drives was signed into law Sept. 30.

“This is a major victory for New York state workers,” said CSEA President Danny Donohue. “This new law, that CSEA has long been advocating for, goes a long way in discouraging anti-union forces.”

Under the provisions of the new law, state funds cannot be used to educate supervisors on anti-union positions, or hire attorneys, employees or consultants who will coordinate an anti-organizing effort.

In addition, employers who receive state funds are required to maintain documentation for a three-year period to prove that state funds have not been used in opposing organizing drives.

Employers can face sanctions of $1,000 for an inadvertent violation of the act, or three times the amount of state money spent if the law was violated knowingly or repeatedly.

Programs offset health care costs

There are several programs currently available to state enrollees that can help offset the increased out-of-pocket expenses enrollees will face in 2003.

The Pre-Tax Contribution Program and the Health Care Spending Account are two of these programs. That, if used properly, can help enrollees pay for health care needs using pre-tax monies. Following is a brief description of each program. Enrollees requiring additional information should contact their personnel office or the program administrator.

Pre-Tax Contribution Program (PTCP)

The Pre-Tax Contribution Program (PTCP) allows enrollees to have their health insurance premiums deducted from their pay before taxes are taken out. This may lower the taxable income and give the enrollee more spendable income. Enrollees were automatically enrolled in this program when they became eligible for health insurance, unless they declined to participate. The enrollee paycheck stub shows whether the enrollee is enrolled in PTCP. "Regular Before Tax Health" will appear in the Before Tax Deductions column if your health insurance premium is deducted from your wages before taxes are withheld. "Regular After Tax Health" will appear in the After Tax Deductions column if your health insurance premium is deducted from your wages after taxes are withheld.

Under IRS rules, by participating in the PTCP enrollees may change their health insurance deduction during the tax year only after a PTCP qualifying event (i.e. change in family status). Additional information on the PTCP is included in the NYSHIP Health Insurance publication Choices for 2003.

If you wish to change your tax-exempt status of your health insurance premium, you must see your health benefits administrator and complete a health insurance transaction form no later than Nov. 30, 2002. No action is needed if you wish to keep your current tax-exempt status.

Health Care Spending Account

The HCS Account is a benefit for eligible state employees that saves enrollees money by allowing enrollees to pay for out-of-pocket health care expenses with pre-tax dollars. The HCS Account allows eligible CSEA members to contribute pre-tax dollars to pay for medically necessary health-related expenses that are not reimbursed by their health insurance or any other benefit plan (i.e. dental/vision). The employee determines the amount of pre-tax dollars contributed to the account, after estimating 2003 anticipated out-of-pocket expenses. The maximum allowable annual contribution is $3,000 and the minimum allowable annual contribution is $150.

If you would like to know more about the Health Care Spending Account program or would like an enrollment brochure, you may contact the NYS Flex Spending Account hotline at 1-800-355-8922 or on the web at www.flexspend.state.ny.us.

Annual Option Transfer period

November is typically the Annual Option Transfer month, when state employees may change their health insurance option and pre-tax contribution status.

Employees who wish to change their plan option must do so during the Option Transfer Period by contacting the health benefit administrator, usually located in their agency personnel office.

Your agency Health Benefits Administrator will receive a supply of Choices for 2003, your guide to NYSHIP health insurance options. If you are thinking about changing your option, read the plan description, which includes important information, including office visit and prescription drug co-pays for each of the health plans available in the area you live and/or work. The Choices for 2003 publication can be a very important resource if you are contemplating changing your health insurance option. If you would like to review your options and the benefits available, you may obtain a copy of this guide from your health benefits administrator directly.

Another important resource during the option transfer period is the Rates & Deadlines Guide. As soon as the 2003 rates are approved, a guide will be sent to the enrollees’ homes as an informed decision can be made about your health insurance choices for the 2003 plan year.

Enrollee premium contributions will increase in January. These increases are twofold: the first is the new requirement for enrollees to contribute toward the prescription drug premium; the second is due to the health insurance costs continuing to increase. It is very important for all enrollees to review the Rates & Deadlines Guide upon receipt to determine what their 2003 calendar year health insurance premium contribution requirement will be.

As always, enrollees will have 30 days from the date that the rate information is approved to make any changes. If you decide NOT to change your health insurance option, you do not have to take any action. If you wish to change health insurance options, you must submit a signed Health Insurance Transaction Form FS-404 to your agency’s Health Benefits Administrator by the deadline specified in the Rates & Deadlines Guide.

Prescription drug changes

Effective Jan. 1, 2003, active CSEA Executive Branch enrollees will be responsible to contribute the enrollee portion of the cost of individual and dependent prescription drug charges under the Empire Plan or Health Maintenance Organization. This will result in a substantial increase to the current payroll deduction.

The premium currently deducted from enrollee biweekly paycheck is for the hospital, medical and mental health/substance abuse components of the health insurance premium. Enrollees do not currently contribute toward the prescription drug portion of the premium.

New York State will continue to pay the majority of the health insurance and prescription drug premium. New York State will contribute 90% of the hospital, medical, mental health/substance abuse and prescription drug components of the health insurance premium for individual coverage and 75% of the cost of these components for dependent coverage. Please remember this is a new requirement for calendar year 2003. Since enrollees can only change their options during the Option Transfer Period, enrollees should review the Choices Guide and the Rates and Deadlines Guide, carefully, to be fully aware of your health plan benefits and premiums for calendar year 2003.

If you have any questions, please contact the CSEA Joint Committee on Health Benefits at 518-785-4774 or 1-800-296-JCHB (5242) or you may send email to jchb@seaune.org.

Empire Plan changes effective Jan. 1, 2003

Participating provider office visit copayments will increase from $8 to $10. (A copayment is the fixed out-of-pocket expense the patient pays each time he or she visits a health plan provider or receives a covered service.)

Prescription drug copayments will increase from $3 generic/$13 brand name (no generic equivalent) to $5 generic/$15 brand name (no generic equivalent).

The non-participating provider annual deductible will increase from $175 to $185. (A deductible applies when using non-participating providers under the Empire Plan.) The cost-sharing amount applies to all claims. For more information on health insurance options, visit the Joint Committee on Health Benefits area of the CSEA website.

Important Reminders for State Employees

The following information is intended for CSEA represented Executive Branch enrollees – enrollees employed by the State of New York covered by one of the following CSEA collective bargaining agreements: Administrative Services Unit, Institutional Services Unit, Operational Services Unit or the Division of Military and Naval Affairs.
New, Better, and Best! CSEA Legal Service Program Members-Only Benefit

One out of every two Americans will need legal advice during the next 12 months. Half of these people will attempt to deal with the matter on their own because they either do not know how to retain an attorney or are afraid of the costs associated with doing so.

The recently consolidated CSEA Legal Services Program now includes most of the types of personal legal representation that you might need. The Program provides you and your dependents with attorney representation in the areas of Workers’ Compensation and Social Security Disability matters, Personal Legal matters, and our newest service, Personal Injury matters. The CSEA Legal Services Program will provide you with quality legal representation at no-out-of-pocket cost or, where there are fees, at pre-published fees known by you beforehand. You will have peace of mind knowing that the Program attorneys have been selected by CSEA for their expertise and commitment to our members.

PERSONAL INJURY MATTERS (NEW)

All too often people do not know who to turn to or what their rights are when they are injured. CSEA has established a new service covering injury claims which may involve a third party beyond your employer.

All personal injury matters including product liability, falls, automobile, boating, aircraft accidents, construction accidents, medical malpractice and any other liability case with significant personal injuries will be handled by competent attorneys with expertise in personal injury litigation.

Representation in this area will be administered through the law firm of Fine, Olin and Anderman, LLP which now has, as a part of its firm, a separate statewide network of expert personal injury attorneys. Access to your case file documents via a secure website will be available to you along with regular case updates via e-mail.

WORKERS’ COMPENSATION AND SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY MATTERS

If you are injured on the job or sustain a job-related illness, CSEA’s Workers’ Compensation Legal Assistance Program can help you through the complex procedures and steps involved in Workers’ Compensation. Additionally, the Program can help you obtain Social Security disability benefits if you become disabled.

Attorneys are available to assist and guide you through the process. They will conduct in-depth interviews with you, correspond directly with your doctors, obtain prior work histories, process all necessary forms and represent you at the hearing.

Representation is provided by the firm of Fine, Olin and Anderman, LLP through its statewide network of offices staffed by attorneys who specialize in workers’ compensation/social security disability law. These attorneys have been providing CSEA members statewide with Workers’ Compensation Legal Assistance representation for almost five years now.

PERSONAL LEGAL MATTERS

CSEA has created a Personal Legal Services Plan to provide you and your dependents with knowledgeable and affordable legal representation to protect your legal rights in personal matters. The initial enrollment fee entitles you to choose from two to five legal services depending on the plan you choose. As a plan participant, you are then also entitled to a list of personal legal services at pre-published rates. These cover the gamut from A to Z (Adoptions to Zoning Appeals), and includes such things as traffic tickets, real estate transactions, family court matters, bankruptcy, landlord/tenant rights and criminal matters. Once enrolled, you are covered under the Plan for one year. A small renewal fee of $25 each year helps to cover the administrative costs of providing you with this terrific coverage.

Legal services are provided by our CSEA regional attorney network, supplemented with specially selected attorneys. Probably you, or someone you work with, know your regional attorney already. These attorneys for the most part have worked with CSEA members for a decade or more, providing employment-related representation. They are each committed to the CSEA Plan and to giving us the best coverage throughout the state.

SO, CONTACT US.

HERE’S HOW

Use of the CSEA Legal Services Program and any of its component Plans is as easy as calling CSEA Headquarters at 1-800-342-4146 during normal business hours Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and selecting the menu option for CSEA Legal Services Program. You will be asked whether you are interested in the injury-related plan or the non-injury related plan. Follow these prompts and you will get directly to the right place to begin the process. Also, brochures are available describing in detail each of the three services in the Program.

What’s In It For You?

THE DEAL WITH DENTISTS

The CSEA Employee Benefit Fund receives many calls regarding requests for referrals for dentists and complaints about services provided by a dentist. The following information may help you in making the important decision of choosing a dentist and receiving the quality dental care you deserve.

For liability reasons, the Benefit Fund cannot refer members to a specific dentist, either participating or non-participating. The participating provider listing contains the names of licensed dentists who have agreed to accept the dental plan allowances as payment in full for covered services. The Benefit Fund has no authority to comment on or investigate the quality of work provided by a dentist. The best way to find a dentist is to ask co-workers, neighbors, relatives and friends about their dental experiences and if they would recommend their dentist.

A dentist must be licensed by the state Board of Regents to provide services in New York State. Many times members ask if there is a difference between a DMD or DDS degree. DMD stands for Doctor of Dental Medicine and DDS stands for Doctor of Dental Surgery and they are equivalent as far as training is concerned. Both are doctoral degrees and the degree received is dependent on the dental school attended. New York licensed dentists have completed a four-year program in dentistry following a minimum of two years of college. New York licensed dentists must pass a state approved examination and are required to take continuing education courses regularly.

Dental hygienists must also be licensed by New York to provide services. RDH stands for registered dental hygienist which means that individual has earned an associate’s or bachelor’s degree from an accredited dental hygiene program, has passed a state approved licensing examination and has taken the required continuing education courses.

Dental professionals must recredential every three years to practice in New York. All dentists, dental hygienists, and certified dental assistants must display a current state registration certificate in the dental facility where he or she is employed. You can verify a license by calling (518) 474-3817, or e-mailing opinfo@mail.nyserd.gov. Another concern of many members in their dental records. Dental patient records usually contain your dental case history, examination findings, and treatment records. They must be maintained by the dentist for six years or until the client turns 22, whichever is longer. Records are usually confidential unless you have approved their release. If you want a copy of your records, provide your dentist with a written request. There may be a charge for the copies of records or the treatment record.

Dentists who are considered specialists have additional education in the field that they practice. They are not licensed in the specialty area by New York state. Some specialists you may encounter are:

Endodontists: perform procedures such as root canals
Oral and Maxillofacial surgeons: diagnose and treat injuries and defects of the head, neck, face, and jaws and perform difficult extractions
Orthodontists: treat problems related to misaligned teeth
Pediatric dentists: specialize in treating children and adolescents
Periodontists: diagnose and treat diseases of the gums and bone surrounding the teeth
Prosthodontists: replace missing teeth with fixed or removables substitutes such as dentures, bridges and crowns.

Knowledge is power. And CSEA has a wealth of knowledge available to members to give them the power to solve issues related to work or home life. Need legal counsel? Interested to know if the candidate in your area supported an important piece of legislation? In need of some research for your next contract negotiation? Turn to the team of CSEA professionals to gain the help, insight and guidance you need.

We have highlighted several CSEA departments to better explain the wealth of knowledge CSEA members can tap into.

Legal Department
The Legal Department provides a myriad of services to benefit CSEA members. CSEA attorneys provide technical assistance on a wide range of labor-related issues to union leaders and staff dealing with legal and contract issues.

Some matters are handled exclusively by CSEA staff, such as all Public Employee Relations Board (PERB) and National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) matters, and some are handled with region attorneys, such as disciplinary representation.

Workers who are injured on the job or who have sustained a job-related injury may use CSEA’s Workers Compensation Legal Assistance Program and other legal benefit programs (See page 17).

Legislative and Political Action Department
CSEA has a respected political action network to make your voice heard by elected officials from school boards and city halls to the New York state Legislature, Congress and the White House. Laws, public policies and elected officials affect the well-being of CSEA members. That’s why CSEA is actively involved in the electoral process, by way of campaigns and endorsements, and the legislative process, by initiating legislation and lobbying to get laws passed that help working families.

CSEA endorses and works to elect candidates who are friendly to working people. Once endorsements are made, CSEA’s Political Action Department works with activists to mobilize support for candidates. This may include polling, precinct targeting, voter identification, voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives, phone banking, organizing and recruiting volunteers.

To make sure that public policy makers understand the concerns of CSEA members, we dedicate resources to political analysis and action. To promote legislative action, CSEA circulated legislation to the appropriate members of the state Legislature for sponsorship and then works with that sponsor to push the bill through to become law. Whether it’s a bill to protect worker safety or easing the costs of prescription drugs, you can count on CSEA to know what’s happening at the local, state or national level.

Research Department
The Research Department analyzes and makes recommendations on major budget and policy issues for CSEA. The department also provides relevant information to region staff to support contract negotiations such as salary comparisons, budget and health benefit analysis.

Education and Training Department
This department provides labor education and training to local and unit officers, stewards, grievance representatives and activists as well as members across the state. The department also provides special training for organizing campaigns or other union needs.

Communications Department
CSEA’s Communications Department constantly seeks and is fed information from all the departments and areas within the union. The department takes the information and feeds it back to the members through The Work Force, newsletters and web site so that members, leaders and activists have the power and knowledge to address the issues that affect them on and off the job.

Many resources are available on-line, at www.csealocal1000.net, and especially in the members-only area.

CSEA also has several key affiliations that strengthen our knowledge and power and therefore strengthen the CSEA membership as well.

AFSCME (American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees)
As Local 1000 of AFSCME, we belong to a national union that has over 1.3 million members. AFSCME has developed a wide range of services and resources that are available to its affiliates. With a qualified and capable staff, AFSCME provides services in four major areas: workplace issues, legislation and political action, communications and leadership training/union building. Especially on issues of national interest, AFSCME is a sound resource that CSEA members are fortunate to have.

The Fiscal Policy Institute (FPI)
The Fiscal Policy Institute is a non-partisan research and education organization that focuses on the broad range of tax, budget, economic and related public policy issues that affect the quality of life and the economic well being of New York state residents. CSEA can turn to the FPI for first rate assistance and information on budget and public policy issues that affect working men and women across the state.

As a CSEA member, you have a broad range of services, staff and knowledge at your fingertips. When CSEA’s knowledge grows, our power grows too. To find out more about any of these CSEA resources, check out the CSEA web site at www.csealocal1000.net or call 1-800-432-4146.
Mission Achievement Awards presented to CSEA Retirees

Two retired CSEA activists recently were presented with the 2001 and 2002 Donald Webster Memorial Mission Achievement Awards at the Annual Retirees Delegate Meeting held in Rye.

Patricia Wilder was presented with the 2002 award. Wilder was a union activist for the 30 years that she worked at various positions within Jefferson County. After retiring, she became involved with the Jefferson-Lewis Counties Retiree Local and served as president for nine years and currently serves as vice president. She is also involved in her local community with the AARP Watertown Chapter, SCORE (Service Corps of Retired Executives) and the Jefferson County Historical Society.

Irene Hills accepted the 2001 Memorial Mission Achievement Award. Due to circumstances last year surrounding Sept. 11, the awards presentation was canceled.

Patricia Wilder and Irene Hills were presented with the Donald Webster Memorial Mission Achievement Awards at the Retiree Delegates Meeting in Rye.

Hills was also a union activist for 30 years as a state employee at Willowbrook State School, now Staten Island DDSO. As a retiree, her activism continues as current president of the New York Metropolitan Retirees Local. Her community activities include helping her church with fundraising while also serving as treasurer of both the Ladies Guild and CYO Senior Guild.

Congratulations to both women on these well-deserved honors.

Break in membership affects eligibility for union office, voting privileges

A break in union membership status can have long-term future implications. Your membership status affects your eligibility with respect to:

- seeking or holding union office;
- signing nominating petitions for potential candidates;
- voting in union elections; and,
- voting on collective bargaining contracts.

Only members “in good standing” can participate in these activities. To be “in good standing,” your dues cannot be delinquent.

If you go on unpaid leave or for any other reason have a break in your employment status, your dues will not continue to be paid through payroll deductions. You must make arrangements to pay your dues directly to CSEA to continue your membership status. If you are either laid off or placed on leave without pay status due to becoming disabled by accident, illness, maternity or paternity you may be eligible for dues-free membership status for a period not to exceed one year. If you are called up for active military duty you may also apply for dues-free status.

Note, however, you must continue to pay dues to run for office.

Dues-free or gratuity membership allows members to continue their insurance coverage while out of work. It does not protect your right to run for or hold office. This does not apply to members who are on leave due to being called up for military duty. Members on active military duty, upon return, are considered to have had continuous membership status for all CSEA election purposes.

Please notify the CSEA Membership Records Department at 1-800-342-4146, Ext. 1327, of any change in your status and what arrangements you are making to continue your membership in CSEA.

Make Your Voice Heard
Tuesday Nov. 5
It is indeed an honor to be able to step forward as your Local president. I am fortunate to be following in the footsteps of such remarkable people as Irving Flamenbaum, Rita Wallace and Tony Giustino. They were leaders who paved the way toward a strong and successful union. A passion for something doesn’t come from your head. It comes from your heart. Passion gives life to vision. My passion for union activism on behalf of my fellow employees has given life to a vision — that our members can earn a decent wage, enjoy guaranteed benefits without the constant fear of losing their jobs and reap rewards commensurate with their hard work.

To realize this vision, we must educate, we must communicate, and, at times, we must fight. And we will fight. As we enter one of CSEA’s most challenging periods ever, we will use every tool at our disposal to make sure that our hard-won benefits, job security and re-staffing concerns are not neglected.

In the past, our strength has been in our unity. It is imperative to our success that we stay united. I call on all our members to work together with their union leadership to promote the goals and objectives that will lead us to success.

I pledge my presidency to the following standards:

- We will maintain the highest level of professionalism.
- We will maintain and expand internal and external communications.
- We will address head-on the challenges that will certainly face us.
- We will work to improve organizational effectiveness whenever and wherever we find it lacking.

- We will maintain an open dialogue between our members and our leadership. In other words, we will listen to you. Your voice will be heard.
- We will strive to negotiate the best possible contracts and benefits.
- We will promote a positive awareness campaign of CSEA work and expand ties and coalitions within the community.

Farewell Message from Tony Giustino

I’ve written many messages to CSEA members over the course of my seven years as president of Local 830. This one, by far, is the most difficult. I have decided, after 35 years in government, that it is time to call it a career. I am moving on to new challenges and new endeavors, to jobs in which I can utilize the tremendous knowledge and experience I have gained both as a union activist and as a government worker. As an attorney who has specialized in labor law, it is my hope to put all of my experience and education together to work on behalf of the labor movement in general and CSEA in particular.

In the upcoming months and years, I will be working with CSEA regional labor attorney Lou Stober, and I will be on hand to assist your union leaders as CSEA enters negotiations on a new contract with Nassau County and the Nassau Health Care Corporation.

I was both proud and humbled to have been elected by our members to three consecutive terms as president. I served with all the energy, strength and dedication that I could muster. You can be certain that my sole motivation through these seven years has been the good of our union.

Our new president is Jane D’Amico, who has served with me since my first election. She has been an outstanding executive vice president and union activist. Jane is a highly competent and capable person who will exert strong leadership over our union as we enter some very challenging times. Jane’s knowledge of the issues that face CSEA and her superb administrative abilities will ensure a smooth transition.

Thanks for your help and support over the years.
I wish you all well.
Yours in unionism,

Tony Giustino
LEGAL UPDATE

Termination Based Upon Vague Charges

by Louis D. Stober, Jr., Esq.,
CSEA Regional Attorney

What do you do when you are terminated or disciplined based upon charges that do not specify what you did wrong? This is the issue in two recent arbitration cases I handled, one involving the Medical Center and one involving the County Clerk’s office. The answer is that an application to dismiss the charges based on due process grounds should be made.

In both cases the arbitrators found the charges or portions of the charges were defective and that the charges had to be dismissed. In one case, the charge read simply “theft of services”. The arbitrator held that the phrase “by itself, is plainly inadequate and is made more so by dint of the fact that the Employer is charging Grievant with a pattern of theft of services … the compound deficiencies mandate that the Notice of Personnel Action be dismissed, without prejudice, and that, accordingly, the Employer be directed to reinstate Grievant and make him whole.” In that case, the Employer was given the opportunity to re-charge the employee since the statute of limitations to charge the employee had not expired.

A similar result occurred in the County Clerk’s case. In that case I made a motion to dismiss the charges against the Grievant claiming that they lacked specificity thereby violating contractual and due process rights by inhibiting my ability to mount a full and proper defense to the charges. The arbitrator held “… all references related to the Grievant’s absences that were included as part of the … Notice of Personnel Action, which charged the Grievant with ‘Dereliction of Duty’ were removed from being a part of the charge. This is so, because:

(a) That part of the charge did lack specificity, in that no dates for the absences were cited;

(b) The absences referred to are contained in a separate charge which was grievable and a final determination had yet to be rendered;

(c) Departmental actions, other than termination, had already been initiated against the Grievant for the referenced absences…”

Therefore, a two-fold attack on the charges, based upon lack of specificity and “double jeopardy” i.e., that the Grievant had already been previously charged for the same matters that he was now being terminated for led to a successful outcome and the Grievant was reinstated with full back pay minus a five day suspension without pay.

As can be seen, there are many issues that have to be analyzed in any disciplinary case besides the issue of whether misconduct or incompetence occurred.

Therefore, if you are ever the subject of discipline, pay particular attention to the language of the charges and let your CSEA representative know whether you have been previously disciplined for the same incidents or whether the charges are unduly vague so as to prevent you from forming a proper defense.

CSEA members running for New York State Assembly

If you want to ensure that CSEA’s legislative agenda is placed front and center in Albany, what better way to do it than electing Assembly candidates who happen to be CSEA members.

CSEA is fortunate this year to have two of its members running for the New York State Assembly. Both have received the CSEA endorsement. CSEA urges all members and their families to get the vote out for Stan Bergman in the 12th Assembly District and Vincent Grasso in the 14th Assembly District.

STAN BERGMAN

Stan Bergman is President of Local 830’s Nassau County Comptroller’s Unit. His name can be found on both Row “B” (Democratic) and Row “H” (Working Families). He has been a CSEA activist for over 10 years and, as Chair of the local’s Anti-Privatization Committee, has been in the forefront in the fight against the privatization of bargaining unit jobs.

Stan has also received the endorsement of National Organization for Women (NOW) and the United Auto Workers (UAW). He has been a crusader for women’s rights and causes. He has also expressed concern over a proposed widening of the Southern State Parkway, calling DOT’s plan a $3 billion waste of taxpayer money that will succeed only in turning the road into another Long Island Expressway.

Stan earned his bachelor’s degree in economics from Queens College and his master’s degree in accounting from C.W. Post. He and his wife, Carol, reside in Levittown with their two daughters. He comes from a union family. His father was a member of the NYC Transit Workers Union and both his mother and grandmother were members of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union (now Unite).

VINCENT GRASSO

Vincent Grasso is a CSEA Local 830 member with the Nassau County Board of Elections. He has been a community volunteer and activist for years, serving as a Literacy Volunteers of America tutor, on the Village of Valley Stream Board of Ethics, as a trustee with the Gibson Civic Association and with an organization called Christmas in July, which rebuilds homes for the poor.

Vincent has been a Long Island resident for 30 years, residing since 1998 in Valley Stream with his wife, Mary. They have one daughter. He attended Sachem High School in Suffolk County and graduated from SUNY Stony Brook. He has been a great advocate of the public school system and is an avid environmentalist.

Since 1992, Vincent has been a member of the Army Reserve. He currently serves as an intelligence non-commissioned officer with the Joint Forces Intelligence Command at Fort Dix, New Jersey.

Politicians and dignitaries from throughout Nassau County turned out to help CSEA honor four activists at Local 830’s Annual Dinner Dance, held this year on Oct. 10 at the Westbury Manor. New President Jane D’Amico, in her first official public appearance, congratulated the honorees and then went on to assure the audience that she’s prepared to carry on the union’s strong leadership.

Former President Tony Giustino thanked everyone for their support during his seven years in office and praised D’Amico as a “competent, intelligent leader who will continue fighting for you.”

Greetings Brothers and Sisters,

Congratulations are in order! As you are probably aware, there has been a change in leadership at Local 830.

After serving as your Vice President for seven years, Jane D’Amico has taken over as the new President of Local 830, following the retirement of former President Tony Giustino. He was a diligent, caring and highly effective representative for his membership, and we are grateful for his many years of service.

It is important to remember that while there has been a change in leadership, your officers’ commitment to the membership is as strong as ever. Jane has a stellar record of leadership, and I expect that she will execute a seamless transition. Let me assure you that Jane D’Amico has my full support, as well as that of the Executive Board, as she embarks on her new mission. She is well-prepared for the challenge of leading the Local, even during these very difficult times.

A recent article in Newsday threw a floodlight on the situation in which many Nassau workers find themselves. County workers, who have been asked to bear the brunt of years of mismanagement in local government, with calls for givebacks, out of title work, and lag payroll, are not being equipped with the basic tools they need.

Too many technological advances have bypassed the workforce. The county invested too little money in infrastructure. Too many workers do not have e-mail access, and archaic systems are used to file records. The result is a profound technological gap. Employees personally lose out because workplaces are behind the times. It will take years of investment in both training and equipment to bridge the gap.

As contract time draws near, you should know that Jane D’Amico, myself, and all of our CSEA leadership are committed to fighting for our members, our jobs, and for the services that we still provide, despite the antiquated infrastructure and the fiscal challenges that lay ahead.

I am confident that we at CSEA not only have the exemplary leadership, but also the professional, quality work force to get the job done, no matter how tough. Remember that when the going gets tough, the tough get going!

Yours in solidarity,

Nick LaMorte, president
CSEA Long Island Region
