Brass Knuckles

- C.P.T.

The idea of brass knuckles is not new. The first pair was made by a man in Scotland over 100 years ago. They were designed to protect the hands of miners. Since then, they have become a symbol of strength and aggression. Brass knuckles are made of brass and steel and are typically used for self-defense. They are illegal in some places. However, in others, they are considered a necessary tool. The history of brass knuckles is interesting and complex. They have been around for a long time and have been used for many different purposes. Today, brass knuckles remain a popular item for those who enjoy the satisfaction of hitting someone with them. Do you own a pair of brass knuckles? What do you think of them?
