History in Egypt is defined by the four seasons in the northern hemisphere. We have seen that the four seasons in the northern hemisphere are divided into summer, winter, spring, and fall. The seasons are based on the position of the Earth relative to the sun and its axial tilt. The summer solstice occurs around June 21 in the Northern Hemisphere, which is also known as the longest day of the year with the shortest night. During this time, the sun appears to be directly overhead at noon, causing temperatures to rise significantly. Conversely, during the winter solstice, which occurs around December 21, the sun appears to be directly overhead at noon in the Southern Hemisphere, resulting in the shortest day of the year and the longest night. The equinoxes, which occur around March 20 and September 22, mark the transition between seasons and are characterized by equal day and night lengths. Historically, these seasonal changes have played a significant role in the development of agriculture, religious practices, and cultural traditions across various civilizations.

There's an order to the world's events, and one of those events is the change in seasons. The summer solstice, which occurs around June 21 in the Northern Hemisphere, is the longest day of the year with the shortest night.
