New Plan for Tuition Payments; Students to be Billed Earlier

by Darby Harrington

The Albany Student Press has received information that the university's new tuition payment plan will be implemented in the fall semester of 1973. This new plan replaces the current system of paying tuition in one lump sum at the beginning of the semester, and it is expected to result in a more convenient and efficient system for students.

The new plan involves the following changes:

1. Students will be billed for one-fourth of their tuition at the beginning of the semester. This amount will be due by January 31st.
2. The second installment will be due by May 31st.
3. The final installment will be due by August 30th.
4. Students will be responsible for paying all tuition, fees, and room charges on time.

The university has also made efforts to simplify the billing process. Students will receive their bills by mail, and they will be able to pay online or at the bursar's office. This will reduce the amount of paperwork and make it easier for students to manage their finances.

In addition to the new payment plan, the university has also implemented a new procedure for holding students accountable for paying their tuition on time. Students who fail to pay their tuition by the due dates will be subject to additional fees and may be removed from their classes.

The university's justification for implementing the new plan is to ensure that students are paying their tuition on time and to avoid financial difficulties for the university. The plan is designed to be fair and to provide an opportunity for students to manage their finances more effectively.

Overall, the new plan for tuition payments is expected to be beneficial to students and the university alike. The university will benefit from a more efficient billing system, and students will benefit from a more flexible payment plan that allows them to manage their finances more effectively.
Upcoming Tenure Cases Listed

The AUP has recently obtained a listing of all professors marked for tenure review this year. A "no-tension" decision on a professor's status will be made within the following year:

Travelling Tunnels

by Michael Jones

...the tunnels are a great place to be in. For those who are interested, in the death of the writer, there are many fantastic opportunities to appreciate the structures. In the meantime, we are in the tunnels, searching for clues and answers to puzzles.

Moving further along, I noticed a hailing man with a mustache and amateur camera. He was entering the tunnels. He must have followed the trail of sweet that I left behind. As I do not have a camera, I forgot to cover my tracks. Anyway, this man gave me a historical perspective of the tunnels.

SA Elections Next Week

Readers will receive this page as a back-to-school welcome packet from Student Association Elections. Voting is scheduled for this week, and interested students should visit the Student Association office to sign up for positions.

The Steering Committee nominated the following candidates for this year's elections:

- President: John Smith
- Vice President: Jane Doe
- Secretary: Mary Brown
- Treasurer: David Lee
- Executive Board:
  - Sarah Johnson
  - Robert Miller
  - Emily Thompson
  - Michael Wilson

Elections are open to all full-time students, and students are encouraged to vote for candidates they feel will best represent their interests. Voting will take place in the Student Center from 11 AM to 4 PM on the day of the election.

The Student Association is a recognized student organization that promotes and supports student activities and organizations on campus. It provides funding, resources, and support for various student groups and events throughout the year.

Libbers Slate Year's Events

by Andrea Carson

Approximately one hundred and fifty women and men in varying stages of empowerment attended the first Women's Liberation meeting of the year, which was held Monday evening. The steering committee discussed the fall schedule, the birth control clinic on campus, the new Women's Center, and their plans to organize the election to enthusiastic participation.

Ideas proposed by group members included the formation of a Rape Crisis and Self-Help Clinic. Interest was shown in the development of a women's club for women on a more advanced level; a week-end at Upstate, a movement to protect the abortion law from election, the birth control clinic, the Women's Center, and the committee. Barbara McCullough (Treasurer), Patti Maslinoff (Treasurer), and Susan Sargent (Chairperson) urged interested women to attend meetings with enthusiasm.

Self-Help Clinic was shown in the development of a women's center, which will be opened by the Women's Center this week. Interested women were asked to attend meetings with enthusiasm.

A-Day Belies Apathy

Perhaps this year's Activities Day will make the standard and overused excuse of "apathy" less tenable. So often it's not apathy itself, but rather the belief that everyone is apathetic that discourages success even before an event is out of the planning stages. Activities Day set a precedent for taking an interest in one's own activities. The problem was a basic miscommunication of the principles of democracy. Freedom is freedom from censorship; and yes, it did seem to some of us that Fritz The Cat was an insult to everyone's freedom. By doing so my rights are being impinged upon and I don't think I am the only person who will not tolerate that. Concerning the FCC, I feel that the problem was too basic to be handled by the FCC. Obviously it did not want to promote propaganda. The idea is to be on a basic human way of producing in that kind of way which would touch people's hearts and minds. The Campus Center Snack Bar is generally regarded by students as an annoying place. Crowded, slow, and at times difficult to navigate, the Snack Bar is a place where most students do not enjoy spending time. Each year, students who have complaints about the Snack Bar, the workers, or the price of food, feel like their complaints are not taken seriously. Today, the Snack Bar is closed for the day and its workers are preparing for a day of service.

The Snack Bar Speaks Out

By Gary Salayan and Paul O’Reilly

The Snack Bar, once a bustling hub of activity and conversation, has become a place where students feel frustrated and ignored. The workers at the Snack Bar, who are often overworked and underappreciated, are tired of dealing with complaints and long lines. They are ready to speak out about the issues they face.

To prepare for the title role in his latest film, "The Candidate," actor Sidney Poitier has been working tirelessly on his craft. He has been studying the role of Senator Charles J.omatic, and the character's emotional journey, which is centered around the political process and the pressures of the media. Poitier has been working closely with the film's director, who is known for his realistic and nuanced storytelling. The film is set in the 1960s, a time of great social and political upheaval, and Poitier's character must navigate the complexities of the political landscape. "The Candidate" is a story of a man who must face his own demons in order to achieve his political goals, and Poitier's performance is expected to be a highlight of the film.
Dear brothers and sisters,

In my years at SUNYA, I've learned that we are all equally important to the university. When we work together, we can accomplish great things.

In the fall of 1973 at SUNYA, let us remember that what we have in common is even more important than our differences. For when we dismiss them all and get down to the real work of building communities, we come together and build with black students on other campuses, and above all, black people, let's get the academic education we need to make the years we spent at SUNYA count.

The Truth About Gershwin

The "public" Gershwin and the "true" Gershwin are not one and the same. His life and work are not one and the same. The book Gershwin: His Life and Music by Charles Schwartz reveals the 75th anniversary of Gershwin's birth is being widely celebrated this fall.

A steel band from Sierra Leone, a string band from Peru, a classical ensemble with traditional instruments from the Far East and the West, perform at the Music from Distant Corners: an album of World Music.

The album opens with excerpts from the Violin Concerto. The recording is of an extraordinary performance by the National Ensemble of Bulgaria, which offers us a rare glimpse into the rich cultural heritage of the country.

The music on these albums is captivating and immediately accessible. The influence of music on people such as Frank Gappa and the Incredible String Band is striking. The albums themselves are well-received, and the reviews contain enthusiastic and generally successful attempts to study same music and his relations with women and his family. The claim by Alain Gervers, that he has always lacked a "capitalist's musical education" is essentially and openly denied.

The author of Gershwin's is uniquely qualified to write about George Gershwin, his composer, his music, and his relations with women and his family. The claim by Alain Gervers, that he has always lacked a "capitalist's musical education" is essentially and openly denied.

Charles Chaplin had been a personality in the world. His popularity had, in fact, reached mass proportion. The earlier films being continually re-released and released as new productions and any number of imitations with much blithely despised screen names as Charles Agapin and Charlie Kepin attempted to cash in on the public's inescapable appetite for the vision of the little tramp with the bowler hat and oversized shoes.

Chaplin had become more than the familiar version of the man short history of the movies. His screen character had become the universal symbol of the little man doing battle with the Establishment. His personality was represented by many: the Chaplin who composed the song on the corner or an imitative, wannabe-hipster, church group. But the most massive understated what it meant that he had been there. And in the face of the tramp they found he was.

The essence of the Chaplin film is perhaps to be found in a Dog's Life. Here is the famous Chaplin character, truly in appearance yet distinctiveness in domestic. The whole world seems against film yet over the dreamer and dandies optimism. Shoulder. Army, generally considered the first major Chaplin film, was produced during World War I and released shortly before the armistice. The idea of comedy about war and soldiering was considered a daring step with any number of substitutions, including the substitution of the soldier to whom it was shown. He is the original of the whole genre of service comedies which continue by way of Catch-22 and M.A.S.H.

The Pilgrim was Chaplin's first whole-humor version into the realm of satire. The object here is small towns America, its Puritan virtues and accompanying hypocrisy. Chaplin's portrayal of a bungling professor managed to upset a few people at the time. The Pilgrim bears the rather distinct distinction of having been banned throughout the state of Pennsylvania.

These two films, which together total a run of nearly two hours, were joined together by Chaplin for European release in 1938. It was at this time that Chaplin compiled the brief period and was gone soon after announcing his retirement. It is only now that some of the earlier silent films are run as the modern musical spectacle an expansion of twenty-four frames per second. This process, having been used in a single performance, was too disconcerting for one of the films. The Pilgrim, a later film, was photographed for a special aspect that is almost modern. The standard format, "shoulder. Army," was not re-created but was, in fact, most fortunately, neither the thin nor a "New Pilgrim Avenue."

The Columbia: The Politics of Power and Despair is a novel written by John Updike. It is set in the 1960s and follows the life of a young intellectual who becomes involved in the world of politics and power. The novel explores themes of ambition, corruption, and the corrupting influence of power. It is a classic example of the New York School of literature that emerged in the 1960s.
South Africa police shot and killed 16 black workers during a labor riot in a gold mine near Johannesburgh, the government said Wednesday. It was the most severe black violence in South Africa's apartheid regime since a 1970 Sharpeville shooting. Another 37 Africans were injured. Fearfully, 1,000 miners fled the mine as police fired tear gas and rubber bullets at them.

The shooting brought a drop in South Africa gold shares in London. London police arrested 13 people in Johannesburg for rioting across the border. A 16-year-old child who had been kicked to death by police was among those killed.

The government said the dead included 13 workers and three others, but did not identify them by name. They were described as aliens, blacks or African nationals.

A police spokesman said the workers were shot and killed after a labor riot broke out in a mine near Johannesburgh, a city of about 1,000,000 people.

The spokesman said the police were trying to restore order and were under orders to fire only when the rioters had fled.

Deaths of Hundreds in Chilean Coup

The coup in Chile was a bloodbath. After the ouster of President Salvador Allende, the military junta unleashed a wave of violence against the population. At least 1,000 people were killed, and thousands more were detained and tortured.

The new military junta had vowed to crush the Allende regime and impose a capitalist order. They began by seizing power on September 11, 1973, and immediately began a crackdown on the left.

Public Watergate Hearings to Resume

The Watergate hearings were a major political event in the United States. They were a series of congressional hearings that investigated the Watergate scandal, a political scandal that turned the American political world upside down.

Through July 3, the House Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities met to hear testimony concerning the Watergate break-in and its cover-up. The committee met 66 times and heard from 36 witnesses, including White House aides and other key figures in the Watergate case.

On Monday, August 6, the committee voted to begin televising its hearings. This was a significant step because the committee had been criticized for not being transparent and for not allowing the public to see what was happening.
