Cooperation...

Last weekend a concrete demonstration was given of the cooperation which can exist between the students and the faculty. Organizers put all their resources and the foreign student benefit.

Last weekend was recognized by many students' minds by quality, but the State Fair helps to prove that conditions are right for the development of the event and her committees which must be a success.

A Solution...

The official column three weeks ago pointed out the need for better organization of the students. The Editorial Board of The Spectator suggested that it might be necessary for the students to get together and to take action by printing literature which they submitted to Student Board of Finance.

This fault reflects the inadequacies of both of these student groups. The Student Board of Finance then took the first step to remedy the situation by recommending that all organizations be placed under a unified government. Quite possibly, the proposal may come to the student body for the students to organize events.

To the Editor:

Our Student Board of Finance and Student Council have in fact created a unified movement which must be given the right to regulate this event and be accepted by the student body.

The Co-op strikes again—this time in a different vein from toothpaste and typewriters. Their new commodity is music. As we prefer to attract students who are interested in good music, we have been working to present a series of concerts to the public. This has been a difficult task, but not impossible, as the public would prefer to see John and his friends entertain them.

Smiles Requested: More Tryouts

Dear Mrs. Bennett, I am very grateful for the February 17 issue of The American Journal of Science. It is the first time that any American scientific periodical has given any space to American decroitology, and it is therefore of great importance to the scientific world.

The article, entitled, "Music and the Psychoanalytic Movement" is of particular interest to me. It is very well written and informative.

I am enclosing a copy of the article for your perusal. I am sure that you will find it as interesting as I do.

Sincerely yours,

Of the male students, who represent the academic prowess of athletes, but not necessarily athletic prowess, it is often difficult to attract students who are interested in good music.

To the Editor:

Our highest judicial and legislative body again shows its ability to govern, and the rest of the state is again left in the hands of our legislative ills. Hence, a relatively small percentage of the male students, who represent the academic prowess of the athletic department, are interested in good music.

South East Asia Crisis Threatens Treaty Organization's Existence

By FRANK SMITH

The South East Asia Treaty Organization, once hailed as a bulwark against communism, now faces its ultimate test. The United States and its allies are preparing to evacuate Laos and withdraw SEATO forces, a move that could undermine the organization's survival.

Although the treaty's original purpose was to protect Southeast Asia from communist aggression, the growing conflict in the region has made it increasingly difficult for the member nations to maintain their commitments. The United States, in particular, has been pushed to the brink of withdrawal due to the heavy casualties and the economic strain of maintaining a military presence.

The United States has been a key player in the organization, providing financial aid and military support to its member nations. However, with the United States considering its own withdrawal, other nations may be unable to shoulder the burden alone. This could lead to the demise of SEATO, which has been criticized for its inability to effectively counter communist influence.

The crisis in Laos is a direct result of the failure of the Paris Peace Accords, which were supposed to bring peace to the region. Instead, the ongoing conflict has only made matters worse, eroding the credibility of the organization.

It remains to be seen whether SEATO will survive this latest crisis. The loss of the United States' support could be fatal, but the organization may still have a fighting chance if other nations can come together to support it. Only time will tell.
