New Chancellor Speaks to Press

by Jonathan Hodge

When asked what his first priority would be as Chancellor, Lieutenant Governor and SUNY Chancellor-designate Clinton Wathen said, "Assuming the role of Chancellor is a great honor and responsibility. It is a position that has been held by some of the finest leaders in our state's history. My goal is to build on the foundation that has been laid by my predecessors and to work with the SUNY community to achieve our shared mission."

Wathen, a native of New York City, has a background in public service and has served as a member of the New York State Assembly and as a member of the New York State Senate. He has also served as a member of the New York State Board of Regents, which governs SUNY.

"As the new Chancellor, my top priority will be to focus on the needs of our students," Wathen said. "I will work to ensure that SUNY continues to provide a quality education to all New Yorkers, regardless of their background or circumstances. I will also work to improve the financial stability of SUNY and to ensure that our institutions are well-positioned to compete in the 21st century."

Mangione Concert: It Felt So Good

By Jonathan Hodges

Chosen by the Select Songfathers' initial listen and sounding at a hit, and also given that many lamented the missing French horn section, the Chuck Mangione concert Friday night at the Palooza sounds like a sparkling gem in the otherwise dismal UCB concert season.

By saying anything else, let me say YES, I LOVED THE CONCERT. Now that that’s out of the way, there are some observations, yes, even some criticism about the show that I would like to make.

First, I’d like to again mention that throughout Mangione was having a hit.
Many of his lines were abridged, and some of the high notes just weren’t as defined and sustained as they usually are. Yet the concert didn’t suffer. The quartet was superb.

The Mangione horn section was a little weak, woodwinds specialist Chris Valada was better than I’ve ever heard him. Valadas’s performance seems somehow related to Mangione. This summer at the Dr. Pepper concert series, I saw Mangione who was crisp and clear and Valada who was more struggling for identity amidst a sometimes overpowering background horn section.
Barone Charles Motzko provided that all important bottom to the quartet’s music.
It just seemed that Mangone was really into the performance. By the time "The X1 Commandment" rolled along, Mangione was ready for a solo that at times became cumbersome, yet always organized, with Mangone in total control.

After a rough beginning, guitarist Grant Geisman began to settle down and give way Mangione’s followers knew he can. He seemed to put it all together in "Legend of the One-Eyed Sailor" and his eclectic guitar work throughout the night was excellent.

Drummer James "Jake" Bradler was solid, though he did sometimes clash with the other voices of the band. While he still needs some maturity, he shows the flexibility needed for ranging from the medley
"Rally", to the airy feel of the new "Mambo Waltz" to such background pieces as "Close the Clouds Away".

The selection of songs was flawless. In an interview after the concert, Mangione stated that the quartet has 50 members in it, any of which could be on the stage.
The songs sounded like they were chosen with an eye toward creating variety throughout, giving the listeners the Mangione fans what they wanted, while saving Mangione so he could still deliver when he needed to.
I try calling a good game, and I have a good bench," said Mangione. "While Mangione draws heavily from his new album, From Do to Good, he was able to mix up the new cuts with the best from his previous albums. Man and Quarter and Close the Clouds Away. It appears that those three last albums, along with the Latest album, show a reliance on the part of Mangione to radically leave the smallest format. Revers to cheer for the Mangione fans, but also a cause of muttering in the artist himself.

"I think kind of disillusioned," said Mangione as he talked about his experimentalism in the world of symphonic orchestras. "During all those years, not one orchestra asked me to guest conduct. The music still lives, but it just takes six months of labor to write for everybody, for sheet music, and play it only once."

Mangione got to use one of my major wishes, with the flag going high in the main instrument and that his music will grow to match its present level.
While I have mentioned that I thought Mangione appeared tired, the only real alternative would be to put the small, full Mangione in concert into one, but that raised his public, not the artist himself, seriously considered.
"Performing is an art very, very important," Mangione declared vehemently.
"Mangione today have lost their sense of direction. All they can think about is playing all the time on the West Coast. It’s that’s your attitude, they should put everyone to sleep at 5.
Mangione has recently written the score for a new scheduled to be released in March, entitled the "Children of the Night."
With Mangione exalted to conduct what the future might hold for him, he said, "Am I talking today to our young people in Japan, and hold more concerts in places designed to hold concerts. "It’s really hard to make it in a football stadium.
This just Friday night. We should have a new concert at the Palace. It felt so good."

Amin: Crazy or Not?

By John Haas

The first time I heard him, he was performing on the international stage. He was 19 years old. His name was Amin. Then Chief of Staff of the Sudanese Peoples' Liberation Movement. I was of course in the audience. But the first reaction was with surprise. And then was followed by a feeling that this was not Amin, this was not originally from Sudan. This was not Amin, this was not a warlord from the Red Sea. This was not Amin, this was a man who had been built on the foundation of a people who were by and large poor and had no access to education. It was a striking impression. The voice of this man was not like any voice I had heard before. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was destined for greatness. The second time I heard him, he was commanding the army in the southern Sudan. The fighting was fierce, the casualties were high. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was truly a leader. The voice of this man was not like any voice I had heard before. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was destined for greatness. The third time I heard him, he was addressing the United Nations. The proceedings were solemn, the atmosphere was intense. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was truly a leader. The voice of this man was not like any voice I had heard before. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was destined for greatness.

The last time I heard him, he was in a courtroom, facing charges of war crimes. The proceedings were fair, the atmosphere was open. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was truly a leader. The voice of this man was not like any voice I had heard before. But I could not help but feel that this was the voice of a man who was destined for greatness.

In the end, I think it was the voice that did it. It was the voice of Amin. It was the voice that made him the leader of Sudan. It was the voice that made him the voice of a people. And it was the voice that made him the voice of a nation.

Defending the Panama Canal in 2010

by Neil H. Bartelsker
The year 2010: the place Panama, the Canal Zone. The event: the centennial of Harry H. O. Bingham's book, "Panama: The Canal and Its People." The purpose: to celebrate the importance of the Panama Canal and its impact on the world.

"Panama: The Canal and Its People" was published in 1910, just one year after the completion of the Panama Canal. Bingham's book was a comprehensive history of the construction of the canal, its impact on the people of the region, and its significance for world trade.

The Panama Canal is a waterway that connects the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, and it is considered one of the greatest engineering feats of the 20th century. The canal reduced the sailing time between the two oceans by thousands of miles and opened up new trade routes around the world.

Faculty Committee Begins Deans Evaluations

by M. L. Newman

Dean of Social and Behavioral Sciences Richard Kolodny and Dean of Business Vincent Hollosi are being evaluated by faculty committees according to Vice President for Academic Affairs David Martin. Committee meetings will be scheduled for the School of Business William Hollosi and Library Director James Lichard. Martin said.

The exams were formed to evaluate the two dean's performances in order to make suggestions on improving future work by them. Since these examinations have never been made before, nothing comes out of them should be very constructive, said Martin.

Committee members were selected by the College Faculty each dean in an effort to ensure the widest possible representation of the faculty, and will submit their recommendations to Martin. Martin will take any recommendations made from the evaluations and submit them to Acting Provost Paul Seiler.

Final decisions could range from suggestions of change in department organization or methods, or in unstable procedures, to specific approval by the faculty, or they will not be made.

A week when the Deans are in town, Martin said. He stressed the importance of the work in progress, which is better future years.

Martin has met with the Kendall Committee, consisting of representatives from Anthropology, Professor John Jones, and Mathematics Professor Michael D. Cerrow. Martin said that the Kendall committee has been meeting since last spring, and recently concluded its work. They expect to meet in early December to finalize the report.
