The NEWS Moves Up

If you compare this week's Statesman with last week's, you will see a distinct difference. But if you compare this week's Moving-Up Day issue with the Moving-Up Day issue of a year ago you will see the changes which were introduced. Last year, the Statesman's Faculty News featured the policy of editorial restraint. This year, the Statesman's Faculty News has been transformed into a lively page of news and opinion. The Statesman, as a whole, has moved up.

The first phase of the paper's transformation was the introduction of a new editorial policy. This policy was adopted in order to make the Statesman a more lively and interesting paper. The Statesman has always been a newspaper for the students, and in order to be successful, it must be relevant to the students. The new editorial policy was designed to make the Statesman more relevant to the students.

The second phase of the paper's transformation was the introduction of a new feature, the"Statesman". The "Statesman" is a weekly feature that provides students with news and information about the college community. The"Statesman" has been very successful, and it has helped to make the Statesman more relevant to the students.

The third phase of the paper's transformation was the introduction of a new section, the "Columns". The "Columns" section contains articles written by students and faculty members. The"Columns" has been very popular, and it has helped to make the Statesman more relevant to the students.

The fourth phase of the paper's transformation was the introduction of a new feature, the "Humor". The "Humor" feature contains articles that are intended to be funny. The"Humor" has been very successful, and it has helped to make the Statesman more relevant to the students.

The fifth phase of the paper's transformation was the introduction of a new feature, the "Features". The "Features" section contains articles that are intended to be informative. The"Features" has been very successful, and it has helped to make the Statesman more relevant to the students.

The final phase of the paper's transformation was the introduction of a new feature, the "Sports". The "Sports" section contains articles about college sports. The"Sports" has been very successful, and it has helped to make the Statesman more relevant to the students.

The Statesman, as a whole, has moved up. The Statesman has become more relevant to the students, and it is more interesting and informative. The Statesman has become a newspaper for the students, and it is more relevant to the students. The Statesman has become more successful, and it is more successful.
Men Outnumber Women On Next Year's Musika

Surprises Creep Into Ceremonies

Tradition once more returned to the State College campus. This year, however, the Musika ceremony was anything but traditional. The usual formalities were omitted, and the ceremonies were more informal. The focus of the evening was on the musical performances of the State College Band and the State College Orchestra. The Band played a medley of popular songs, while the Orchestra performed a selection from Bizet's "Carmen." The evening concluded with a rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by the Band, followed by a "blowtorch" salute.

Traditional Speeches Spontaneously Engendered

This evening's ceremony was marked by spontaneous speeches from several members of the audience. The speeches were delivered with great enthusiasm, and were well-received by the crowd. The highlight of the evening was the speech delivered by the President of the Student Union. The President spoke on the importance of unity and cooperation, and urged the students to work together to achieve their goals.

Boards Release Editors, Staffs For Next Year

Halvacs, Dunne, Kyle, Klein To Edit State News; News To Be Co-Edited

On the night of the Musika ceremony, the boards of the State News and the State College News announced their editorial staffs for the upcoming year. The State News will be edited by Halvacs, Dunne, and Kyle. The State College News will be edited by Klein. The boards expressed their hope that the new staffs would continue the tradition of excellence that has characterized their publications in the past.
